The Reparation Due to the Sacred Heart

HIS HOLINESS, POPE PIUS XI

This translation of the "Miserentissimus Redemptor," issued May 8, 1928, was made for N. C. W. C. News Service by Mgr. James H. Ryan, D.D., Ph.D., and is copyrighted by the N. C. W. C. News Service.

VENERABLE BROTHERS, GREETINGS AND APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION:

OUR most merciful Redeemer, having assured the salvation of the human race by His death on the Cross, before He ascended to His Heavenly Father, said these consoling words to His sorrowing Apostles and disciples: "Behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world" (Matt. xxviii, 20). These happy words are also Our own source of hope and salvation, words which, Venerable Brothers, come readily to mind every time when, from this high watchtower, as it were, We look down upon the human family afflicted by so many grievous ills, and upon the Church, assailed without respite by attacks and plots. As a matter of fact, this promise of Our Divine Lord, as it once upon a time raised high the fallen spirits of the Apostles and urged them on to spread most zealously the seed of the Gospel through all the earth, so also it has guided the Church to victory over the powers of Hell. Assuredly, Our Lord Jesus Christ has always assisted His Church; and most powerfully and effectively on those very occasions when she was encompassed by the greatest dangers and calamities. Christ then bestowed on her precisely those helps most necessary to meet the conditions of the times, by His wisdom which "reacheth from end to end mightily and ordereth all things sweetly" (Wisdom viii, 1). Nor in our own times has "the hand of the Lord been shortened" (Isaias lix, 1), especially on such occasions when an erroneous doctrine is being taught and spread about throughout the world, and by reason of which we fear that the sources of the Christian life may be dried up, for by such errors men are led to forsake the Christian life and the love of God.

Obligation to Make Amends

Since some Christians, perhaps, are ignorant of, and others are indifferent to, the sorrows which the most loving Jesus revealed to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque in His apparitions to her, as well as His wishes and desires which He manifested to mankind, all of which in the last analysis work to man's advantage, it is Our pleasure, Venerable Brothers, to write you at some length of the obligation which rests upon all to make those amends which we owe to the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus. We feel certain that each of you will zealously teach to your own flocks what We herein write and that you will exhort them to do all that We wish to be done.

From among all the proofs of the infinite goodness of Our Saviour none stands out more prominently than the fact that, as the love of the Faithful grew cold, He, Divine Love Itself, gave Himself to us to be honored by a very special devotion and that the rich treasury of the Church was thrown wide open in the interests of that devotion by which we honor the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii, 3). As formerly Divine Goodness wished to exhibit to the human race, as it came from the Ark of Noe, a sign of the renewed covenant between them, "my bow which appears in the clouds" (Gen. ix, 14), so in our own so troubled times, while that heresy held sway which is known as Jansenism, the most insidious of all heresies, enemy of the love of God and of filial affection for Him—for this heresy preached that God was not so much to be loved by us as a Father as to be feared as an unrelenting Judge—the most kind Jesus manifested to the nations His Sacred Heart, unfolding our banner of peace and love to the breeze, an augury of certain victory in the battle before us. Wherefore Our Predecessor, Leo XIII, admiring as he did the great possibilities which devotion to the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus contains, with reason wrote in his Encyclical Annum Sacrum: "Just as when the newly-born Church lay helpless under the yoke of the Cæsars, there appeared in the heavens a cross, at once the sign and cause of the marvelous victory which was soon to follow," so today behold before our very eyes there appears another most happy and holy sign, the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, crowned by a brilliant cross set among raging flames. In this Sacred Heart we should place all our hopes, from it, too, we ask and await salvation.

Devotion to Sacred Heart Praised

Are, we not to see, Venerable Brothers, in that blessed sign and in the devotion which flows from it, the very substance of our holy religion, as well as the rules to guide us toward a more perfect form of life, since the Sacred Heart is the road which will most surely lead us to know intimately Jesus Christ and will cause our hearts to love more tenderly and to imitate Him more generously than we have heretofore done? Since this is so, it is no wonder then that Our Predecessors have always defended this most praiseworthy devotion to the Sacred Heart from the objections launched by those who will not accept it, that they have praised it most highly and have always promoted it with the greatest possible zeal in so far as the conditions of time and place seemed to demand such action. Certainly, it is due to nothing short of the inspiration of God that the childlike love of the Faithful for the Sacred Heart increases day by day; that pious associations to promote devotion to the Sacred Heart have come into being everywhere, and that the custom has become quite common of receiving Holy Communion on the First Friday of the month, a custom which had its origin in the wish of Jesus Christ Himself.

Among the different practices which directly accompany devotion to the Most Sacred Heart assuredly the foremost is the act of consecration by which we offer to the Heart of Jesus both ourselves and all that belongs to us, recognizing that all we have comes to us from the infinite charity of God. Our Lord, having revealed to that most pure lover of His Sacred Heart, St. Margaret Mary how much more He insisted on the immense love which He has borne toward us than on His rights over us, asked that mankind pay Him this tribute of devotion. Therefore the Saint herself, together with her Spiritual Director, Claude de la Colombière, first of all offered Him an act of consecration. In the course of time individuals began paying Him the same tribute, then whole families and certain associations, and last of all, public officials, the inhabitants of cities, and whole nations. Due to the machinations of wicked persons, both in the century just ended and in this century, things had come to such a pass that men despised the rule of Christ and publicly declared war upon His Church by means of laws and popular enactments contrary to both the Divine and natural law, even going so far as to cry out publicly: "We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke xix, 14). But by this act of consecration there burst forth, in startling contrast to these cries, the unanimous voice of the lovers of the Sacred Heart, rising to vindicate the glory and defend the rights of the same Sacred Heart, "for he must reign" (I Cor. xv, 25) "may Thy Kingdom come." Finally, at the beginning of the century as a happy consequence of all this, the whole human race which belongs by inherent right to Christ, "in whom all things are reestablished" (Eph. i, 10), was consecrated to His Most Sacred Heart by Our Predecessor then happily reigning, Leo XIII, amid the applause of the whole Christian world.

Feast of Christ the King Instituted

These auspicious and happy beginnings We Ourselves, through the great goodness of God, brought to completion, as was pointed out in Our Encyclical Quas Primas, on the occasion when, acceding to the desires and wishes expressed by numerous bishops and the Faithful, We instituted at the close of the Jubilee Year the Feast of Christ the King of all men, which feast We ordered to be celebrated solemnly all over the Christian world. By that act We not only brought forth clearly into the light of day the fact of the supreme dominion of Christ over all things, over civil society and the home, as well as over individuals; We also experienced beforehand the joy of that most happy day when the whole world will submit joyfully and willingly to the sweet yoke of Christ the King. Wherefore We commanded that, together with the celebration of this feast, there should be renewed annually the act of consecration, and this We did in order to obtain more surely and in greater quantities the fruits of such a consecration and to bind with Christian love in the communion of peace all peoples to the heart of the King of Kings and Sovereign of Sovereigns.

Moreover, to all these expressions of veneration, and especially to that most fruitful one, the act of consecration, which by means of the institution of the Feast of Christ the King has been, as it were, again confirmed, it is expedient that another be added, and of this last, Venerable Brothers, We wish to speak now somewhat at length. We refer to the act of expiation or of reparation, as it is called, to be made to the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Duty of Reparation Imposed

If in the act of consecration the intention to exchange, as it were, for the love of the Creator the love of us creatures stands out most prominently, there follows almost naturally from this another fact, namely, that if this same Uncreated Love has either been passed over through forgetfulness or saddened by reason of our sins, then we should repair such outrages, no matter in what manner they have occurred. Ordinarily, we call this duty, reparation. If we are held to both these duties for the same reasons, we are held to the duty of making reparation by the most powerful motives of justice and of love of justice, in order to expiate the injury done God by our sins and to reestablish, by means of penance, the Divine order which has been violated; and of love, in order to suffer together with Christ, patient and covered with opprobrium, so that we may bring to Him, in so far as our human weakness permits, some comfort in His sufferings. Since we are all sinners, burdened with many offenses, we should honor God. This should take place not only by means of that cult by which we adore, in the veneration due Him from us, His Infinite Majesty, or by means of prayer when we recognize His supreme dominion over us, or by acts of thanksgiving when we praise His infinite generosity toward us; it is necessary to do more than all this. We must also satisfy the just anger of God because of "the numberless sins, offenses, and negligences" which we have committed. Therefore, we must add to the act of consecration, by virtue of which we offer ourselves to God and become thereby, as it were, sacred to Him by reason of the sanctity which necessarily flows from an act of consecration, as the Angelic Doctor teaches ("Summa Theol." IIa-IIae, q. 81, a. 8, c.), an act of expiation, by means of which all our faults are blotted out, lest perchance the sanctity of infinite Justice spurn our arrogant unworthiness and look upon our gift as something to be rejected rather than to be accepted.

All men are obliged to make reparation since, according to the teachings of our holy Faith, our souls have been disfigured, as a result of the pitiable fall of Adam, by original sin; we are subject also to our passions and corrupted in a truly sad way, and have thus made ourselves worthy of eternal damnation. It is true that the proud philosophers of this world deny the above truth, resurrecting in its place the ancient heresy of Pelagius which conceded to human nature a certain inborn goodness which, by our own powers, raises us up to ever higher levels of perfection. These false theories, born of human pride, have been condemned by the Apostle who admonishes us that "we were by nature children of wrath" (Eph. ii, 3). As a matter of fact, from the very creation of the world mankind has recognized, in one way or another, the obligation of making reparation, and impelled, as it were, by a natural instinct, has tried to placate the Deity by offering Him public sacrifices.

Truth Announced By Psalmist

But no effort on our part would have been great enough to expiate the faults of men if the Son of God had not assumed human nature in order to redeem us. The Saviour of mankind announced this truth speaking through the Psalmist: "Sacrifice and oblation Thou wouldst not: but a body Thou hast fitted to Me. Holocausts for sin did not please Thee. Then said I: Behold I come" (Heb. xi, 5-7). In truth "He hath borne our infirmities and carried our sorrows: He was wounded for our iniquities" (Isaias, liii, 4, 5), "who His own self bore our sins in His body on the tree" (I Peter ii, 24), "blotting out the handwriting of the decree that was against us, which was contrary to us, and He hath taken the same out of the way, fastening it to the cross" (Col. ii, 14), so "that we, being dead to sins, should live to justice" (I Peter ii, 24).

Though the ample redemption of Christ more than abundantly satisfied for all our offenses (cf. Col. ii, 13), nevertheless, by reason of that marvelous disposition of Divine Wisdom by which we may complete those "things that are wanting of the sufferings of Christ in our own flesh, for His body, which is the Church" (Col. i, 24), we are able, in fact, we should add to the acts of praise and satisfaction which "Christ in the name of sinners has presented to God," our own acts of praise and satisfaction. However, we must always remember that the expiatory value of our acts depends solely on the bloody sacrifice of Christ, which is renewed without interruption on our altars in an unbloody manner, since in both cases "the victim is the same, the one who offers himself by means of the ministry of the priesthood is the same, the very same one who offered Himself on the Cross, the only difference being in the manner in which the sacrifice is made" (Conc. Trid. Sess. xxii, c. 2). For this reason we must bring together, in the august sacrifice of the Blessed Eucharist, the act of immolation made by the priest with that of the Faithful, so that they, too, may offer themselves up as "a living sacrifice, holy, pleasing unto God" (Rom. xii, 1). Therefore, St. Cyprian dared to affirm that "the sacrifice of Our Lord is not complete as far as our sanctification is concerned unless our offerings and sacrifices correspond to His passion" (Ep. 63, n. 381).

The Apostle admonished us that "bearing about in our body the mortification of Jesus" (II Cor. iv, 10) and "buried together with him by Baptism unto death" (Rom. vi, 4), not only should we "crucify our flesh with the vices and concupiscences" (Gal. v, 24) "flying the corruption of that concupiscence which is in the world" (II Peter i, 4), but also that the "life of Jesus be made manifest in our bodies" (II Cor. iv, 10), and, having become partakers in His holy and eternal priesthood, we should offer up "gifts and sacrifices for sins" (Heb.

v, 1). For not only are they partakers in the mysteries of this priesthood and in the duty of offering sacrifices and satisfaction to God, who have been appointed by Jesus Christ the High Priest as the ministers of such sacrifices, to offer God "a clean oblation in every place from the rising of the sun even to the going down" (Malach. i, 10), but also those Christians called, and rightly so, by the Prince of the Apostles, "a chosen generation, a kingly priesthood" (I Peter ii, 9), who are to offer "sacrifices for sin" (Heb. v, 1) not only for themselves but for all mankind, and this in much the same way as every priest and "high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in the things that appertain to God" (Heb. v, 1).

Benefits of Oblation and Sacrifice

In the degree to which our oblation and sacrifice will the more perfectly correspond to the sacrifice of Our Lord, that is to say, to the extent to which we have immolated love of self and our passions and crucified our flesh in that mystical crucifixion of which the Apostle writes, so much the more plentiful fruits of propitiation and of expiation will we garner for ourselves and for others. A wondrous bond joins all the Faithful to Christ, the same bond which unites the head with the other members of the body, namely, the communion of saints, a bond full of mystery which we believe in as Catholics and by virtue of which individuals and nations are not only united to one another but likewise with the head itself, "who is Christ: from whom the whole body, being compacted and fitly joined together, by what every joint supplieth, according to the operation in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in charity" (Eph. v, 15, 16). This, too, was the prayer which Jesus Christ Himself, the Mediator between God and men, at the hour of His death made to His Father, "I in them and Thou in Me: that they may be made perfect in one" (John xvii, 23).

As the act of consecration proclaims and confirms our union with Christ, so the act of expiation, by purifying us from sins, is the beginning of such union; our participation in the sufferings of Christ perfects it, the offering we make to Him of our sacrifices for the welfare of our brethren brings such union to its final consummation. This was precisely the design of the mercy of Jesus when He unveiled to our gaze His Sacred Heart, surrounded by the emblems of His Passion, and aflame with the fire of love, that we, on the one hand, perceiving the infinite malice of sin, and on the other, filled with a knowledge of the infinite love of Our Redeemer, might detest more cordially sin and substitute for it an ardent love of Him.

The spirit of expiation or of reparation has always played one of the chief roles in the devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Certainly, reparation is most consonant, with the origin, nature, efficacy, and particular practices of this special devotion, a fact confirmed by history and the customs of the Faithful, by the sacred liturgy, and by the official documents of Roman Pontiffs. As a matter of fact, on the occasion when Jesus revealed Himself to St. Margaret Mary, though He then insisted on the immensity of His love, at the same time, with sorrowful mien, He grieved over the great number of horrible outrages heaped upon Him by the ingratitude of mankind. He used then these words, words which should be graven on the hearts of all pious souls so as never to be forgotten by them: "Behold this Heart which has loved men so much, which has heaped upon them so many benefits. In exchange for this infinite love It finds ingratitude; instead It meets with forgetfulness, indifference, outrages, and all this at times even from souls bound closely to It in the bonds of a very special love."

Communion of Reparation Urged

In order to make reparation for such faults, He, among other requests, made this special request as one which would be most acceptable to Him, namely, that the Faithful, inspired by the intention of making reparation, should receive Holy Communion—and for this reason it is called the "Communion of Reparation"—and for an hour should practice acts and prayers of reparation before the Blessed Sacrament—which devotion is rightly called the "Holy Hour." The Church has not only approved these devotions but has enriched them with very special spiritual favors.

But how can we, one may ask, believe that Christ reigns happily in Heaven if it is possible to console Him by such acts as those of reparation? We answer in the language of St. Augustine, words quite apposite to our subject: "The soul which truly loves will comprehend what I say" (In Ioan. Evang. Tract. xxvi, 4).

Every soul which burns with true love of God, if it but turns its thoughts to the past, sees in meditation and can contemplate Jesus suffering for mankind, afflicted by grief in the midst of sorrows suffered "for us men and for our salvation," weighed down by agony and reproaches, "bruised for our sins" (Isaias liii, 5), in the very act of healing us by His bruises. With so much the more understanding can pious souls meditate upon these mysteries if they appreciate that the sins and crimes of men, no matter when committed, were the real reason why the Son of God was condemned to death and that even sins committed now would be able of themselves to cause Christ to die a death accompanied by the same sufferings and agonies as His death on the cross, since every sin must be said to renew in a certain way the Passion of Our Lord, "crucifying again to themselves the Son of God and making Him a mockery" (Heb. vi, 6). And if, in view of our own future sins, foreseen by Him, the soul of Jesus became sad even unto death, there can be no doubt that by His prevision at the same time of our acts of reparation He was in some way comforted when "there appeared an angel from heaven" (Luke xxii, 43) to console that Heart of His bowed down with sorrow and anguish.

At the present time, we too, in a marvelous but no less true manner, may and ought to console that Sacred Heart which is being wounded continually by the sins of thoughtless men, since—and we read this also in the sacred liturgy—Christ Himself grieved over the fact that He was abandoned by His friends. For He said, in the words of the Psalmist, "My heart hath expected reproach and misery. And I looked for one that would grieve together with Me, but there was none: and for one that would comfort Me, and I found none" (Psalm lxviii, 21).

Recalls Augustine's Words

To the above we may add that the expiatory passion of Jesus Christ is renewed and in a certain manner continued in His mystic body, the Church. To use again the words of St. Augustine, "Christ suffered all that He had to suffer: nothing at all is lacking to the number of His sufferings. Therefore His sufferings are complete, but in Him as in the head; there remain even now the sufferings of Christ to be endured in the body" (On Psalm lxxxvi). In fact, Christ Himself made the same statement, for to Saul "breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord" (Acts ix, 1), He said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest" (Acts ix, 5). By this He plainly affirmed that persecutions visited on the Church are in reality directed against the Head of the Church. Therefore, Christ, suffering in His mystical body, with reason desires to have us as companions in His own acts of expiation. He asks to be united with us for since we "are the body of Christ and members of member" (I Cor. xii, 27), in so far as the Head suffers so also should the members suffer with it (Cf. I Cor. xii, 26).

Church Opposed By Governments

Now, anyone who uses his eye and mind, if he but think of this world "seated in wickedness" (I John v, 19), can see, as We stated above, how urgent, especially in our own times, is the need of expiation or of reparation. There come to Our ears from every side the cries of nations, whose rulers or governments have actually risen up and have conspired together against the Lord and against His Church (Cf. Psalm ii, 2). We have seen both human and Divine rights overthrown in these countries, churches destroyed to their very foundations, religious and consecrated virgins driven from their homes, thrown into prison, made to go hungry, treated with unspeakable savagery. We have seen troops of boys and girls, torn from the bosom of Holy Mother Church, made to deny and blaspheme Christ, and urged to commit the worst sins against purity. We have seen a whole Christian people menaced, oppressed, in constant peril of apostasy from the Faith or of a most barbarous death. These happenings, sorrowful as they are, seem to have been foreseen in such calamities as are now occurring, and to anticipate "the beginning of those sorrows" which will be revealed by "the man of sin who is lifted above all that is called God or that is worshipped" (II Thes. ii, 4).

Nor is that other spectacle, Venerable Brothers, less sad that even among the Faithful, washed as they have been by Baptism in the Blood of the Innocent Lamb and enriched by His grace, we encounter so many of every station in life who, ignorant of things Divine, are poisoned by false doctrines and live a sinful life far from their Father's house, without the light of the true Faith, without the joy of hope in a future life, deprived of the strength and comfort which come with the spirit of love. Of them one may say quite truthfully that they are immersed in darkness and in the shadow of death. Moreover, disrespect for the discipline of the Church is on the increase among the Faithful as also disrespect for ancient traditions, upon which the Christian life has been built, by which domestic society is governed, by which the sanctity of marriage is protected. The process of educating youth has been weakened or spoiled by too much effeminacy, and even the right to educate children in their religion has been taken away from the Church. Christian modesty is forgotten, sad to say, both in our manner of life and of dress, especially by women. There has come into existence, too, an uncontrollable desire to possess the base things of this world, an unreasonable regard for civil interests, an intemperate searching after popular applause, a despisal of legitimate authority and of the Word of God, by all of which the Faith itself is shaken to its foundations or placed in jeopardy.

Hour of Prophecy Arrived

There must be added to this accumulation of evils the sloth and laziness of those who, like the Apostles asleep or like those disciples who had fled away, since they are not firmly rooted in the Faith, have shamefully abandoned Christ, burdened with sorrows and attacked by the satellites of Satan, as well as the perfidy of those others who, following in the footsteps of Judas the traitor, either with sacrilegious temerity approach Holy Communion or go over to the camp of the enemy. There thus comes to mind, almost involuntarily, the thought that we have arrived at the hour prophesied by Our Lord when He said: "And because iniquity has abounded, the charity of many shall grow cold" (Matt. xxiv, 12).

If the Faithful, burning with love for the suffering Christ, should meditate on all these considerations, it would be unthinkable that they should not expiate with greater zeal both their own and the faults of others, that they should not repair the honor of Christ, be filled with zeal for the eternal salvation of souls. Assuredly, We may adapt to our own age to describe it what the Apostle wrote: "When sin abounded, grace did more abound" (Rom. v, 20), for even though the sinfulness of man has greatly increased, by the grace of the Holy Ghost, there has also increased the number of the Faithful who most gladly try to make satisfaction to the Divine Heart of Jesus for the numerous injuries heaped on Him. What is more, they joyfully offer themselves to Christ as victims for sin.

Anyone who has been considering in a spirit of love all that has been recalled to his mind up to this, if he has impressed these thoughts, as it were, upon the fleshy tablets of his heart, such a one assuredly cannot but abhor and flee all sin as the greatest of evils. He will also offer himself whole and entire to the will of God and will strive to repair the injured majesty of God by constant prayer, by voluntary penances, by patient suffering of all those ills which shall befall him; in a word, he will so organize his life that in all things it will be inspired by the spirit of reparation.

From this spirit of reparation there have been born many families of religious men and women, who, day and night, in tireless manner, have set before themselves the task of taking, in as far as that is possible, the place of the Angel who comforted Jesus in the garden. Likewise, certain pious associations, approved by the Holy See and enriched with indulgences, have as their ideal to make reparation for sin by means of certain practices of piety and of the virtues. And not to speak of all these holy works, We select out one for mention, namely, the frequent practice of making solemn reparation not only by individuals but often by whole parishes, dioceses, and even nations.

Wishes Devotion Be General

Venerable Brothers, just as the act of consecration, which began in a small way and afterwards came into general use, achieved, by reason of Our approval, the splendid purposes and ends desired, so We wish ardently that this devotion of reparation, which has already been introduced and is the pious custom of certain. places, possess the seal of highest approval of Our Apostolic authority, so that it likewise may come to be practiced universally and in a most solemn manner by all Christian peoples. We establish, therefore, and We order that annually, on the Feast of the Sacred Heart, in all the churches of the world, there take place a solemn act of reparation (the same formula must be used by all and is the one attached to this Encyclical) to our most loving Redeemer, in order that we may, by this act, make reparation for our own sins and may repair the rights which have been violated of Christ, the King of Kings and our most loving Master.

Nor can We doubt, Venerable Brothers, that from this holy practice now reestablished and extended to the whole Church We may expect many signal blessings, not only for individuals but for society itself, domestic and civil, since Christ Himself promised to St. Margaret Mary that "He would shower abundantly His graces upon those who rendered this honor to His Sacred Heart." Assuredly sinners "looking on Him whom they pierced" (John xix, 37), stricken by the sorrow of the Church, detesting the injuries offered to the King of Kings "will return to themselves" (Isaias xlvi, 8), for they cannot become obstinate in sin in the presence of Him whom they have wounded "coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matt. xxvi, 64), for then too late and without hope, shall they "bewail themselves of him" (Apoc. i, 7).

But the just will "be justified still and the holy will be justified still" (Apoc. xxii, 11). They will consecrate themselves with renewed ardor to the service of their King. Seeing Him so despised and so often attacked, seeing too that so many injuries are inflicted on Him, certainly their zeal for the salvation of souls will be increased when they hear the lament of the Divine Victim, "What profit is there in My Blood?" (Psalm xxix, 10) and, at the same time, meditate upon the joy of the Sacred Heart "over the sinner who doth penance" (Luke xv, 7).

Prayer for God's Mercy

We, before all other things, hope and greatly desire that the justice of God, which would have pardoned Sodom if only ten just had been found therein, shall be exercised with more mercy towards all mankind. The Faithful, in union with Christ, the Mediator and our Head, will pray for and ask from God such mercy. May the most gracious Mother of God be propitious to these Our wishes and to these Our commands; she who gave us Christ the Redeemer, who watched over Him, and, at the foot of the Cross, offered Him a victim for our sins. She, too, by reason of her wondrous union with Him and of a most singular grace of God, became and is piously known as the Mother of Reparation. Confiding in her intercession with Jesus, "the one mediator of God and man" (I Tim. ii, 5), who wished to associate his own Mother with Himself as the advocate of sinners, as the dispenser and mediatrix of grace, We impart from Our heart, as an augury of Divine favors and a proof of Our fatherly love, to you, Venerable Brothers, and to all the flock confided to your care, the Apostolic Blessing.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's, the ninth of May, 1928, the seventh year of Our Pontificate.

Prayer

An Act of Reparation to the Sacred Heart of Jesus

SWEET Saviour Jesus, whose boundless love for men is repaid with blackest ingratitude, so forgetful, so heedless, so scornful of Thy great goodness: behold us prostrate before Thy altar, seeking with special tribute of honor to atone for the sinful indifference of men and for the outrages heaped from every side upon Thy most Loving Heart.

And yet, mindful that we also more than once have been guilty of like unworthy deeds, we are stirred to deepest sorrow and therefore we beseech Thy mercy, first of all, upon ourselves. We are eager and resolved to make amends not only for our own transgressions but also for the sins of those who, straying far from the path of salvation, either will not follow Thee as shepherd and leader, or, trampling under foot their baptismal vows, have shaken off the easy yoke of Thy holy law.

We seek, O Lord, to atone for this wickedness in all its hideous forms. In particular we purpose to expiate immodesty and shamelessness in behavior and dress, the numberless snares that are laid for the corruption of innocent minds, the breaking of holy days, the horrible blasphemies uttered against Thee and Thy saints, the revilings flung at Thy Vicar on earth and at Thy priesthood, the slights which are put upon Thee in the very Sacrament of Thy Divine love, the frightful sacrileges by which It is profaned, and lastly the wrongs that are publicly committed by nations in defying the authority and in violating the rights of the Church which Thou didst establish.

Would that with our blood we might wash away such awful crimes! The more earnestly, O Lord, as reparation to Thy Divine honor, we offer Thee the self-same satisfaction which once Thou didst offer on the Cross to Thy Father, and which daily is renewed upon the altar, beseeching Thee to receive it together with the expiations of Thy Virgin Mother, of all Thy Saints, and of all devout Christians. From the bottom of our hearts we promise, with the help of Thy grace, to compensate as far as in us lies for our evil doing, for the sins of others and for our coldness and theirs toward Thee and Thy most generous love. This we purpose to do by unyielding firmness of faith, by pureness of life, by perfect observance of the Gospel law, above all, the precept of charity. We promise to hinder as best we can any further offenses against Thee. We will bring, moreover, as many as possible into Thy holy fellowship.

Receive, we beseech Thee, Jesus most kind, through the intercession of Blessed Mary ever Virgin, Mother of Reparation, our willing homage of expiation. Grant us the gift of perseverance and through it keep us ever faithful to our duty and to Thy service, so that we all may come at last to that blessed homeland where Thou, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit, livest and reignest God, for ever and ever. Amen.

The Catholic Man

Excerpts from sermon delivered at St. Mary's Seminary. Reprinted from the "Baltimore Catholic Review."

AS I see you assembled here in such splendid numbers, I cannot keep my thoughts from roving far back along the dim, misty hallways of the past, down through the arches of the forgotten years; I see all the while your type—noble, well-defined.

That type stands out cleancut, chiseled against the background of the centuries. I see him in Rome of old, daring the Neros and the Cæsars all, proclaiming the great individuality of man against the all-consuming tyranny of state absolutism.

I see him ten times over with unruffled countenance, face cauldrons of burning oil, or gaze with courage unflinching into the glaring eyes of fierce Numidian lions, or welcome even gayly the rack, the sword, the rope and the cross, while Imperial Rome marshaled her vast resources of power in a vain attempt to crush the spirit that would not down or die.

With the young Church that for three centuries had hidden, crushed and bleeding, in the bowels of the earth, I see him emerge triumphant to plant the Cross of Christ high over that mausoleum of Rome's fallen and forgotten gods—the Pantheon.

I see him save the civilization of his day and roll back the onrushing tides of fierce barbarian hordes. Then better still, task of a thousand years, go back with them to far uncharted lands, teaching the unlettered and unfettered tribes of the forest that no man is a law unto himself, teaching them the Christian principles of obedience to authority, and all the while lifting them from the slough of heathen degradation to the high level of Christian civilization.

Building the Christian State

I see him thus laying the imperishable foundation, aye, and building the superstructure as well as that magnificent edifice of which today we are so justly proud—the Christian state which preeminently is for the individual, and not one in which the individual is for the state, a democracy in which the state is not the sovereign master, but the sovereign servant.

I see this figure of whom I speak bend reverently over the prostrate form of woman, raise her gently, but firmly and place her on the pedestal of honor whence long since she had fallen, or was it dragged she had been? No matter, he placed her there on perfect equality with himself, enthroned her queen of his heart and home; yes, and kept her there despite all the assaults against her honor and her dignity, proclaimed in terms uncompromising as they were unmistakably clear, the sanctity of the marriage union, shouting back to the world with its Lothairs, its Philips, its Henry the Eighths and its Napoleons, to every intruder who would dare trespass upon that sacred domain: "The Christian family by God's command must endure forever, the foundation on which will rest everything holy, permanent and abiding in society."

Guards Light of Learning

I see him through these long centuries of Faith, guarding with jealous care the light of learning, giving the lie to those who would style them those "Dark Ages." I see him in long lines of stately Gothic Cathedrals, whose fluted columns and pointed arches and tapering spires chorus man's eternal aspiration to his God. I see him in realms of science, of literature and of art, and progress keeps pace with his every footstep. Ah yes, I see him marching on—to the steady tramp, tramp of the fast-fading years, head erect, eyes looking to Heaven, ever in the van, holding high the torch of truth and the flaming sword of justice, and lo! I draw near and ask "Who art thou"? Calm, majestic, resolute, he turns his gaze full upon me and with voice of power answers: "I am that glorious paragon of the handiwork of God; I am a Catholic Man!"

Yes, and I see him ploughing the broad expanse of uncharted sea with Christopher Columbus, to plant the Cross of Christ and the banner of civilization on the shore of a new and undiscovered America.

I see him in the stalwart, undaunted missionaries blazing their fearless way through virgin forests that a Christianized America might rise and take her rightful place, first and foremost among the nations of the earth. I see in him De Soto and Marquette, Ponce de Leon, Menandez and Champlain; see his type crystallized in the noble Charles Carroll of Carrollton, in men who were willing to do and die that America might live, men like old John Barry, Stephen Moylan, Francis Meagher, peerless Phil Sheridan and those valiant soldiers—sons from other shores, who battled for both the North and South, aye the ever-lengthening chain of dauntless Catholic heroes down to our own hour, when mine own eyes saw the glory of the day when full forty per cent of the heroes who volunteered to shoulder the rifle and man the ships to carry Old Glory over the crest of battle to victory were Catholics. . . .

The Holy Name Man

What is it that has thus singled out Catholic Man, made him a compeer among his fellows, enabled him to reach out and touch the stars? One thing, and one alone —the only one that could, and this, his unswerving, unreserved loyalty and devotion to his religion and his God. You are here today, all of you, because you, too, are committed to the belief and practice of that same religion, which has seen kingdoms rise and fall, empires crumble and dynasties swallowed up in eternal oblivion. . . .

This generation, like any other, has its great virtues as well as its besetting sins. As long as men are men, humans humans, there will be deplorable sins and vexatious problems; but all the while the Kingdom of Christ is being extended to the hearts of men. In nineteen hundred brief years, Catholicity brought society to its present high peak of development. Remember only twelve illiterate men began that wonderful conquest!

If there is a struggle ahead for the right, it is not a quarrel between Catholicism and sectarianism. Unfortunately, Protestantism is dead. Its churches are empty, and the children of those sturdy pioneers who came to these shores for religious freedom, are fast becoming strangers to Christianity. The struggle ahead is between Catholicism and the neo-paganism, between religion and atheism, in the last analysis, a death-grip between Catholicism and unbelief.

Catholicism will win. But you men of the Holy Name owe a generous contribution to the cause before the victory is won. Education alone will not purge the world of evil. That theory, the world's, has long since been blasted. Not social veneer; for underneath, minus the grace of God, man is an animal full of savagery.

What the world needs, what you owe, is personal sanctity. Though you be only a tiny, hidden unit in the vast human family, the influence of your godliness will never vanish. You stand today in the grace of God; you are other than refined animals, because the Christian influence of your type has swept down through the centuries. Even as the ripple of a pebble cast on the bosom of the mighty ocean sweeps everlasting to the furthest shores, and then back and back again, so will your personal sanctity roll out upon the unborn generations, out to the very verge of Eternity.
