

Second Sunday After Pentecost

Dominica Secunda Post Pentecosten

1962 TLM: the invitation tested by charity in deed and truth

Proper	TLM text / reference	Scriptural axis	Connection
Introit	Factus est Dominus protector meus (Ps. 17:19-20)	Rescue into breadth	The Lord protects, saves, and brings the worshipper into a wide place because he wills him.
Collect	Perpetual fear and love of the holy Name	Reverence and stable love	God does not abandon those whom he establishes in the solidity of his love.
Epistle	1 John 3:13-18	From death to life; deed and truth	Christ's self-gift becomes the measure of material mercy toward the needy brother.
Gradual	Ad Dominum, cum tribularer, clamavi (Ps. 119:1-2)	Truthful speech	The cry for deliverance from lying lips prepares the hearer to recognize excuses as disordered speech.
Alleluia	Domine Deus meus, in te speravi (Ps. 7:2)	Hope under persecution	Hope asks God for the rescue promised in the Introit amid the world's hatred of the brethren.
Gospel	Luke 14:16-24	The great supper	Excuses disclose resistance; the invitation reaches the poor and then the roads and hedges.
Offertory	Domine, convertere, et eripe animam meam (Ps. 6:5)	The Lord's return and rescue	The imperative addresses God: return, O Lord, deliver my soul, and save me for your mercy's sake.
Communion	Cantabo Domino, qui bona tribuit mihi (Ps. 12:6)	Thanksgiving for benefits	The communicant sings because the supper and every good are first received as gift.
Postcommunion	Sumptis muneribus sacris	Growth in salvation	Frequent participation in the mystery is asked to increase salvation's effect.

Four Senses of Scripture

Thread	Synthesis
Literal	At a Pharisee's table, Jesus tells of invited guests who refuse a prepared supper; the householder then brings in the poor, feeble, blind, and lame and sends his servant farther out until the house is filled.
Allegorical	Augustine reads the host as Christ and the prepared supper as Christ's saving gift proclaimed by the apostles; in the Mass, the parable also examines readiness for Eucharistic communion.
Moral	First John tests the response to invitation: one passes from death to life by brotherly love, opens material goods to the needy, and loves in deed and truth rather than by an excuse-making tongue.
Anagogical	The supper points toward the heavenly banquet; the Secret asks for conduct transferred toward heavenly life, and the Postcommunion asks that sacramental participation increase salvation's effect.

Core Scriptural Symbols

Thread	Synthesis
Banquet	God prepares and summons before any guest acts. Augustine, Sermon 62.1 and 5, identifies Christ as host and spiritual food; the Eucharistic application is sharpened by this Gospel's place within Mass. The table is therefore gift, judgment, and promise: one may be invited yet remain inwardly unfed.
Excuse	Farm, oxen, and marriage are not condemned in their literal existence. Augustine, Sermon 62.2-6, allegorizes them as domination, confinement to bodily proof, and fleshly pleasure. His reading controls the diagnosis without requiring the homilist to identify ordinary work or marriage themselves as evil.
Brother	First John moves from Christ laying down his life to the believer opening worldly goods to a brother in need. The brother is where invisible charity becomes visible; the altar cannot be treated as private consolation sealed off from another's hunger.
Tongue	The Epistle opposes word and tongue to deed and truth, while the Gradual asks deliverance from lying lips and a deceitful tongue. Before the Gospel displays verbal excuses, the chant exposes speech that evades reality.
Wideness and house	The Introit's latitudo becomes, by editorial comparison, the Gospel house in which room remains. Grace makes room and presses outward; attachment contracts the heart around possession, proof, and pleasure.

Patristic Exegesis of the Grouped Propers

The following is an editorial synthesis of the complete liturgical sequence. Augustine's identified works control the readings of the Epistle and Gospel; connections among chants, prayers, and altar sequence are stated as this sheet's liturgical argument.

Thread	Synthesis
Introit: Ps. 17:19-20	The Lord becomes protector, leads the psalmist into breadth, and saves him because he wills him. The entrance condition is rescue already received, preventing the coming invitation from being heard as an achievement of the guest.
Collect	Fear and love of the holy Name are requested together and perpetually; God's governance establishes the faithful in the solidity of divine love. The prayer asks for a heart neither careless about the summons nor afraid to approach the giver.
Epistle: 1 John 3:13-18	Augustine, Homily 5 on First John, is paraphrased: brotherly love marks the passage from death to life; its perfection is laying down one's life, and its beginning is giving one's means to the needy. The Epistle gives the concrete test by which the Gospel's response will be judged.
Gradual: Ps. 119:1-2	A cry from tribulation asks deliverance from lying lips and a deceitful tongue. Editorially, the chant intensifies the Epistle's contrast between love in tongue and love in deed and prepares the hearer to recognize excuses as disordered speech.
Alleluia: Ps. 7:2	Hope asks salvation from persecutors. The verse answers the Epistle's opening warning that the world may hate the brethren and repeats the Introit's conviction that rescue comes from God.
Gospel: Luke 14:16-24	Augustine, Sermon 62.1-7, reads Christ as the host and food, and the excuses as forms of pride, sensory unbelief, and fleshly attachment. The literal progression remains decisive: the prepared invitation is refused, then carried to those without social claim and outward to the roads and hedges.
Offertory: Ps. 6:5	Convertere addresses the Lord: return, deliver my soul, and save me because of your mercy. After the excuses, the correct response is not self-conversion claimed as an accomplishment but a plea for God's merciful return and rescue.
Secret	The dedicated oblation is asked to purify the offerers and transfer their conduct day by day toward heavenly life. The verb transferat answers the Epistle's translati sumus de morte ad vitam : grace makes the proclaimed passage an offered way of life.
Communion: Ps. 12:6	The communicant sings to the Lord who has bestowed good things and praises the Name of the Most High. Reception becomes gratitude, the opposite of treating the supper as an entitlement.
Postcommunion	After receiving the sacred gifts, the Church asks that the effect of salvation grow with repeated participation in the mystery. Frequency is ordered to increasing fruit, including the charity in deed demanded by the Epistle.

Grouped instruction. God rescues and prepares the supper before the hearer can claim merit; the Word then exposes hatred, closed resources, deceptive speech, and respectable excuses. At the altar the Church asks the Lord to return, asks the oblation to purify and redirect conduct, receives the gift with song, and prays that repeated Communion bear increasing fruit in charity.

Exegetical Notes

- Luke's parable follows the saying, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God" (Luke 14:15), and is spoken while Jesus is dining in a Pharisee's house. The table setting gives both promise and warning.
- The Gradual's deceitful tongue, the Epistle's word and tongue, and the Gospel's three excuses form a close verbal sequence: speech is tested by truth and action.
- The Secret supplies the transformation previously forced onto the Offertory: transferat asks that the oblation move conduct toward heavenly life, while convertere asks the Lord himself to turn or return and rescue.

Patristic and Sainly Witnesses

Witness	Text / source status	Homiletic use
St. Augustine	Direct quotation, Homily 5 on First John, section 12: “If you are not yet equal to the dying for your brother, be even now equal to the giving of your means to your brother.”	Give the congregation a graded but serious beginning: material mercy trains charity toward Christ’s self-gift.
St. Augustine	Direct quotation, Sermon 62, section 5: “Do not get your mouth ready, but your heart.”	Move the banquet image from appetite or mere attendance to faith and interior readiness for Communion.
St. Augustine	Paraphrase, Homily 5 on First John, sections 10-12: love of the brother is the hidden life of the Christian and grows from giving material aid toward laying down one’s life.	Keep “deed and truth” concrete without demanding that every hearer begin at charity’s final perfection.
St. Augustine	Paraphrase, Sermon 62, sections 2-7: farm, five yoke, and wife signify domination, sensory unbelief, and fleshly pleasure when these keep a person from Christ’s supper.	Diagnose attachments without preaching contempt for property, work, the senses, or marriage themselves.

Homiletic Synthesis

Thread	Synthesis
Proposition	God’s supper is sheer gift, but its welcome becomes fruitful in those whom grace frees from excuses and forms into charity in deed and truth.
Movement I — gift	The Lord protects, brings into breadth, establishes in love, prepares the supper, and sends the invitation beyond every circle of status.
Movement II — resistance	Hatred remains death; closed resources betray a closed heart; deceitful speech and lawful goods become evasions when they outrank God’s summons.
Movement III — sacramental conversion	The Offertory asks the Lord to return and rescue; the Secret asks the oblation to purify and redirect conduct; Communion answers gift with song and seeks increasing fruit.
Final horizon	Begin with one deed of mercy toward a real brother and approach the altar with the heart readied for the heavenly banquet where God’s house is filled.

Preaching Applications

- Name one lawful good that has become a standing excuse, then ask what concrete obedience would restore its right order.
- Move directly from 1 John 3:17 to a hidden material act for someone in need; do not leave charity at the level of sentiment.
- Before Communion, pray the Offertory personally: ask the Lord to return, deliver the soul, and make reception fruitful in deed and truth.

Primary References

- Missale Romanum 1962, Dominica Secunda post Pentecosten; local OCR corpus identified in the README. Psalm numbering follows the missal's Vulgate numbering.
- St. Augustine, Homily 5 on the First Epistle of John, especially sections 10-12, NPNF working translation: <https://www.newadvent.org/fathers/170205.htm>.
- St. Augustine, Sermon 62 on Luke 14:16-24, especially sections 1-7, NPNF working translation: <https://www.newadvent.org/fathers/160362.htm>.

Full Patristic and Saintly Texts

- St. Augustine, Homily 5 on the First Epistle of John, section 12: “If you are not yet equal to the dying for your brother, be even now equal to the giving of your means to your brother.”
- St. Augustine, Sermon 62, section 5: “Do not get your mouth ready, but your heart.”