

Sixth Sunday After Pentecost

Dominica Sexta Post Pentecosten

TLM propers: the baptized are buried, fed, steadied, and fortified

Proper	TLM text / reference	Scriptural axis	Connection
Introit	Dominus fortitudo plebis suae (Ps. 27:8–9; verse 1)	Strength for God's people	The worshipper cries to God not to be silent, then confesses him as the people's strength and saving protector.
Collect	Deus virtutum : increase religion; nourish and guard the good	Growth in grace	The new life requires God both to implant love of his name and preserve what grace begins.
Epistle	Rom. 6:3–11	Buried with Christ; newness of life	Baptism gives participation in Christ's death and resurrection, not advice for renovating the old man.
Gradual	Convertere, Domine; Domine, refugium factus es nobis (Ps. 89:13, 1)	The Lord's return and refuge	Mortal servants ask the Lord to return and confess him as the refuge of every generation.
Alleluia	In te, Domine, speravi (Ps. 30:2–3)	Trust and deliverance	Threatened trust asks God to incline his ear and hasten deliverance.
Gospel	Mark 8:1–9	Christ feeds the four thousand	Christ's compassion supplies a people who cannot sustain themselves on the way.
Offertory	Perfice gressus meos (Ps. 16:5–7)	Steady steps in God's paths	The psalmist asks God to steady his steps in the divine paths, hear him, and display saving mercy.
Secret	Propitiare, Domine, supplicationibus nostris ... nullius sit irritum votum, nullius vacua postulatio ... quod fideliter petimus, efficaciter consequamur	Faithful prayer made effective	God is asked to receive his people's oblations, let no vow or petition be empty, and bring faithful asking to effective fulfillment.
Communion	Circumibo, et immolabo (Ps. 26:6)	Sacrifice of jubilation	The psalmist sacrifices jubilation in God's tabernacle, sings, and praises the Lord.
Postcommunion	Repleti sumus, Domine, muneribus tuis	Cleansing and aid	God's gifts are asked to cleanse by their effect and fortify by their help.

Sense	Synthesis
Literal	Romans 6 says that the baptized have been buried with Christ and must reckon themselves dead to sin; Mark 8 recounts Christ's compassionate feeding of a hungry multitude.
Allegorical	Baptism joins the Church to Christ's paschal death and life. Bede and Augustine read broken bread as opened Scripture, apostolic distribution, the Spirit's fullness, and the Church.
Moral	The Christian must refuse the old servitude, walk in the grace already given, confess dependence, and receive rather than pretend to be self-sustaining.
Anagogical	Romans joins present newness of life to future life with Christ, while the Postcommunion asks that received gifts fortify the pilgrim Church under the risen Lord, over whom death no longer has dominion.

In Illo Tempore...

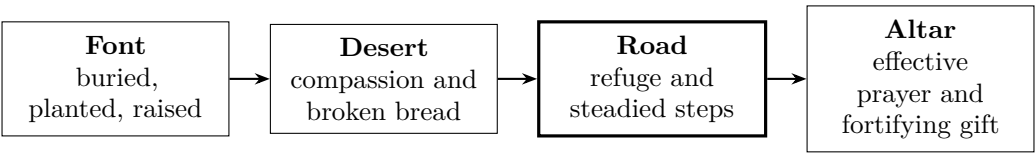

Canonical order governs; proper rows give traditional composition data under Location and Date, the additional Gospel row gives the narrated setting, spanning rows distinguish inherited attribution from historical judgment, and Psalm numbers follow the Vulgate with common modern numbers in parentheses.

Proper	Citation	Location	Date
Offertory	Ps. 16:5–7 (modern 17:5–7)	Israel; exact site unrecorded	c. 1000 BC
The title traditionally calls this a prayer of David but identifies neither an episode nor a writing site, so his stage of life remains unknown. David speaks to God as a threatened yet confident servant; Israel receives the plea for tested innocence, steady steps, and saving mercy. The prayer enters the royal and messianic Psalter while modern study cannot establish its historical author, date, or location (Ps. 17 and notes, NABRE).
Communion	Ps. 26:6 (modern 27:6)	Judah / Israel; exact site unrecorded	c. 1010 BC
The Greek and Latin title attributes the psalm to David before anointing, traditionally placing it amid his threatened pre-royal life in Judah; Scripture's several anointings prevent a more exact stage. He addresses God and worshipping Israel, moving from enemies to God's dwelling and jubilant sacrifice. The future king's confidence becomes Israel's sanctuary prayer and a Christian horizon for praise at Communion; modern authorship, date, and site remain uncertain (Ps. 27 and notes, NABRE).
Introit	Ps. 27:1, 8–9 (modern 28:1, 8–9)	Israel; exact site unrecorded	c. 1000 BC
Tradition attributes the hymn to David without naming an episode, life stage, or place. The Davidic speaker addresses God, then names the Lord as strength of his people and saving refuge of his anointed; the psalm petitions God to save, bless, and shepherd Israel. This royal horizon locates the people beneath divine kingship, although modern scholarship cannot recover a secure composer, date, or site (Ps. 28 and notes, NABRE).
Alleluia	Ps. 30:2–3 (modern 31:2–3)	Israel; exact site unrecorded	c. 1000 BC
The title traditionally names David and adds “for an ecstasy” without recovering a biography or site. He addresses God from danger, while Israel inherits his plea for an inclined ear and rapid deliverance. Later in the psalm the entrusting of spirit enters the Passion through Christ's words and the Church's martyr witness through Stephen; modern authorship, date, and place remain unknown (Ps. 31 and notes, NABRE ; Luke 23:46; Acts 7:59).
Gradual	Ps. 89:1, 13 (modern 90:1, 13)	Israel's wilderness journey; exact site unrecorded	c. 1400 BC
The superscription calls the psalm a prayer of Moses, the man of God, traditionally placing it during his wilderness leadership after the Exodus. Moses speaks to God for mortal Israel, whose rebellious generation dies outside the land, and asks the eternal refuge to return compassionately to his servants. This makes human frailty part of Israel's covenant pilgrimage; modern scholarship treats it as an anonymous communal lament without a recoverable place or date (Ps. 90 and notes, NABRE ; Numbers 14).
Gospel	Mark 8:1–9	Rome (present-day Italy)	c. AD 65
Narrated event	Mark 7:31–8:10	Near the Sea of Galilee after Decapolis ministry; exact site unrecorded	Later Galilean ministry, c. AD 29
Ancient tradition identifies St. Mark, sometime companion of Paul and interpreter of Peter, writing Peter's preaching for Roman Christians near the end of the apostolic generation. The event row instead places Jesus, the disciples, and a hungry crowd in a deserted place after ministry in the Decapolis, before the crossing to Dalmanutha. Modern study often dates Mark c. AD 65–70 for Gentile Christians at Rome, while Syria and a date just after 70 remain live alternatives (Mark introduction and 7–8, NABRE ; Catholic Encyclopedia , “Gospel of Mark”).
Epistle	Rom. 6:3–11	Corinth, Achaia (present-day Greece)	c. AD 57
Tradition and modern scholarship identify St. Paul as author of Romans, with Tertius serving as scribe, for Jewish and Gentile house churches at Rome which Paul had not yet visited. His eastern mission was nearly complete and the Jerusalem collection came next; Spain lay beyond Rome. Baptism into Christ's death and risen life gives that expanding Church a shared identity and a new walk before Paul himself reaches the capital in chains (Romans introduction; Rom. 15:22–29; 16:21–23, NABRE).

Source-Grounded Synthesis

Governing thesis: the newly alive remain a dependent people

Romans announces a real baptismal passage into Christ’s death and life; the surrounding prayers refuse to treat that gift as self-sufficiency. God strengthens, implants, nourishes, and guards; Christ feeds bodies that would fail on the road; the offerer asks for steadied steps and faithful prayer; Communion turns received mercy into jubilation while the Postcommunion still asks for cleansing and aid.

Reading order: receive life at the font; receive food in the desert; ask for mercy along the road; offer and receive at the altar. This itinerary is the guide’s synthesis of the formulary, not a claim that a cited Father composed its sequence.

Strength Gives a New Walk (Int., Coll., Ep.)

The Introit names the Lord as strength, saving protector, blessing, and shepherd of a people. The Collect keeps that divine agency before every imperative: God implants love of his name, increases religion, nourishes what is good, and guards what he has nourished. Paul then states the baptismal indicative before the moral command. Those baptized into Christ have been buried into his death so that they may walk in newness of life; their old servitude is crucified, but they must still reckon and live according to the gift.

Decisive witness: Chrysostom on Romans 6

Chrysostom distinguishes Christ’s bodily death, the baptized person’s real death to sin, continuing mortification with divine help, present fruit, and future bodily resurrection. The body is not the “old man” and is not evil. Grace establishes a new reality that summons cooperation without becoming a merely honorary status.

Compassion Feeds the Pilgrim (Grad., All., Gosp.)

Moses’ Gradual teaches newly baptized hearers to remain mortal servants asking the eternal refuge to return. The Alleluia adds the threatened prayer for an inclined ear. Mark then shows a concrete multitude that has stayed with Jesus for three days and would collapse if dismissed fasting. Christ’s human compassion and divine power preserve bodily need; Bede and Augustine further read the broken bread as opened Scripture distributed through apostolic ministry, without erasing the literal meal.

Level	Affirmation	Guardrail
Literal event	Christ feeds four thousand hungry people in a deserted place.	Bodies and material mercy are not disposable symbols.
Patristic reading	Broken bread images scriptural nourishment, the Spirit’s fullness, and ecclesial distribution.	These witnesses do not make every detail direct Eucharistic exegesis.
Liturgical horizon	The Mass carries the fed people toward sacramental Communion.	The font–desert–altar route remains editorial synthesis.

Steadied Steps Keep Asking (Off., Sec.)

The Offertory's Perfice gressus meos answers Paul's command to walk by putting actual steps beneath divine action. The Secret likewise begins with God's merciful reception and asks that no vow or petition be empty. Augustine's Letter 130 supplies the controlling distinction: faithful prayer is formed by faith, hope, charity, the Lord's Prayer, and the final good. A temporal refusal can therefore be mercifully efficacious; confidence does not compel God to ratify the petitioner's preferred scenario.

Three orders held together

Indicative: God has joined the baptized to Christ. Imperative: therefore walk and reckon according to the gift. Petition: ask God to nourish, steady, fulfill, cleanse, and fortify that walk. Removing any one of the three produces distortion.

Gift Becomes Jubilation and Aid (Comm., Postcomm.)

Augustine reads Psalm 26's sacrifice of jubilation as world-embracing confession of Christ sounding in heart and deed. Ambrose's mystagogy supplies explicit altar doctrine: the cleansed people hastens from the font to Christ's Body and Blood, and the communicant's "Amen" joins confession to reception. Yet the Postcommunion preserves dependence after fullness, asking that the received gifts cleanse by their effect and fortify by their aid.

Four stages held together by four controls (Int., Coll., Ep., Grad., All., Gosp., Off., Sec., Comm., Postcomm.)

Movement	Decisive evidence	Control retained
Font: received life	The Introit and Collect name divine strength, implantation, nourishment, and preservation; Romans makes baptism participation in Christ's death and risen life.	Gift precedes effort without erasing Paul's command to reckon and walk according to what baptism gives.
Desert: given food	The Gradual and Alleluia keep mortal servants dependent; Christ's compassion feeds bodies, while Bede and Augustine read broken bread as scriptural and ecclesial nourishment.	Spiritual exegesis cannot dissolve the literal crowd, hunger, loaves, fish, or material mercy.
Road: steadied desire	Mark's danger of fainting, Paul's new walk, and the Offertory's petition for steady steps converge; the Secret asks that faithful prayer attain its God-given effect.	The convergence is liturgical synthesis, and faithful prayer does not compel a preferred temporal outcome.
Altar: jubilant aid	Augustine reads the Communion verse as Christ-centered praise; Ambrose identifies Christ's Eucharistic gift, and the Postcommunion asks for cleansing and fortification.	Full sacramental reception remains received aid, not proof that pilgrimage or moral dependence has ended.

Source-Grounded Exposition

A people lives by received strength (Int., Coll., Ep.)

The Introit names the Lord as the strength, saving protector, blessing, and ruler of his people. The Collect keeps that agency before every later command: God gives love of his Name, increases religion, nourishes the good, and guards what he has nourished. Baptismal life is real life, but never self-originating or self-sustaining life.

Romans 6: Baptismal Fact and Baptismal Task (Ep.)

Paul's sequence begins with incorporation before exhortation. The baptized have entered Christ's death, been buried with him, and received a new principle of life. Only then does Paul command a new walk and a truthful reckoning. Present moral renewal and future bodily resurrection are joined without being collapsed.

Paul's phrase	Sacramental fact	Present demand	Future horizon
Baptized into Christ's death	Baptism joins the person to the once-for-all death of Christ; it is not advice to imitate a distant example.	Sin's former claim cannot be treated as the baptized person's defining identity.	The one who died and rose will die no more; his resurrection grounds Christian hope.
Buried with him	The old life is placed under Christ's paschal burial.	"Walk in newness" requires embodied conduct corresponding to the gift already received.	Burial tends toward resurrection, not merely toward a revised moral record.
Planted together in the likeness of death	The agricultural image suggests incorporation capable of bearing fruit.	Righteousness, sanctification, and adoption must become visible fruit rather than an honorary title.	Paul promises belonging to Christ's resurrection itself, not only a present analogy.
The old man crucified	The "old man" names the regime and totality of wickedness, not the substance of the body or created human nature.	Servitude to sin is broken so that obedience no longer belongs to the former master.	The destruction of death's dominion appears first in Christ and finally in those who live with him.
Reckon yourselves dead to sin, alive to God	The imperative recognizes what grace has accomplished and calls for judgment according to that reality.	Christian agency is summoned, but specifically "in Christ Jesus," with the risen Lord as ally.	The present reckoning anticipates the unveiled life that baptism promises.

St. John Chrysostom — Homilies 10–11 on Romans

On Romans 6:2–13 Chrysostom distinguishes Christ's bodily death from the baptized person's real death to sin. Former transgressions are buried by gift; continued mortification requires earnest human cooperation, yet with abundant divine help. "Planted together" bears present fruit in righteousness, sanctification, and adoption and points beyond them to bodily resurrection. The body is not the old man and is not evil; the old man is wickedness whose rule baptism breaks.

Three orders that must remain together

Indicative: God has joined the baptized to Christ. Imperative: therefore walk and reckon according to that gift. Petition: the Collect, Offertory, Secret, and Postcommunion ask God to nourish, steady, fulfill, cleanse, and fortify that walk. Removing the indicative produces moralism; removing the imperative produces inert sacramentalism; removing petition imagines that grace is needed only at the beginning.

Cyril and Ambrose: What the Font Gives (Coll., Ep.)

The fourth-century mystagogues speak to the newly baptized after the rites. They do not reduce the font to a visual reminder. At the same time, they carefully distinguish Christ's historical, bodily Pasch from the sacramental mode by which believers participate in it.

Witness and locus	Mystagogical account	Reality communicated	Boundary retained
St. Cyril of Jerusalem, Mystagogical Catechesis II.4–8	The threefold descent and ascent follows confession of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost and images Christ's three-day burial. The same water is grave and mother.	The rite is likeness in mode, yet salvation and fellowship in Christ's sufferings are real gifts; dying and birth coincide sacramentally.	Christ actually died, was buried, and rose bodily. The baptized does not repeat that event or undergo the same physical subject of death.
St. Ambrose, On the Mysteries 19–21, 28	Water, Spirit, Cross, and the Trinitarian Name bury wickedness and bring forth resurrection to God. Visible water must be read through divine presence and operation.	The font effects regeneration rather than merely representing a decision already complete.	Divine working does not make the baptized incapable of later infidelity; Ambrose immediately joins gift to a rule of life.
St. Ambrose, On the Mysteries 41–43	The Spirit's seal is to be preserved in faith and works; the cleansed people then hastens from the font to Christ's altar and heavenly feast.	Baptismal identity is inherently Eucharistic and ecclesial: the regenerated are led toward sacramental nourishment.	This supplies a genuine font-to-altar mystagogy, not direct commentary on Mark's multiplication or this Sunday's ordering.

The Collect's verbs fit the mystagogical order. God has begun a real good; therefore the Church asks him to increase religion, nourish the good, and preserve what he nourishes. Cyril's grave-and-mother image prevents both nostalgia and presumption: the font is an accomplished birth whose life must grow.

Mark 8: Compassion in the Desert (Gosp.)

The literal event controls every further reading. A real crowd has remained with Jesus for three days in a deserted place. They have nothing to eat. Christ knows that sending them away fasting would make them collapse on the journey, receives the available loaves, gives thanks, breaks, distributes through the disciples, feeds all, and leaves seven baskets. Bodily hunger and divine compassion are not disposable scenery for allegory.

Feature in Mark	Bede, In Marci Evangelium Expositio II.32	Augustine, Sermon 45.1–3	Interpretive limit
Christ's compassion and power	Bede sees in the one Redeemer truly human sympathy for the multitude and divine power in feeding four thousand.	Augustine begins from the accomplished wonder and asks hearers to receive its intelligible speech.	Christological and spiritual readings intensify rather than deny the material feeding.
Bread broken and given through disciples	For Bede, breaking opens the mysteries; apostolic ministry distributes the food of life to the Church.	Augustine compares scriptural exposition to bread broken from a common heavenly store shared by preacher and hearer.	Both primarily interpret nourishment by the Word; neither passage is direct Eucharistic exegesis of Mark 8.

Feature in Mark	Bede, In Marci Evangelium Expositio II.32	Augustine, Sermon 45.1–3	Interpretive limit
Seven loaves and seven baskets	Bede associates the loaves with the Spirit’s sevenfold grace and the remaining abundance with higher or still-unfolded teaching.	Augustine reads seven as the Spirit’s complete operation and the baskets as the Church’s fullness.	Numerical readings are patristic allegory, not replacements for seven actual loaves and baskets in the narrative.
Four thousand	The multitude manifests the ecclesial reach of the food distributed through apostolic ministry.	Augustine connects four thousand with the Church founded upon the fourfold Gospel.	The ecclesial number-symbolism must remain subordinate to Christ’s concrete mercy toward the whole hungry crowd.

Bede’s source status

Bede’s Latin commentary survives in In Marci Evangelium Expositio II.32. The English formulations used here are cautiously paraphrased from the later Catena Aurea, which preserves excerpts. They are not presented as a checked translation of Bede’s complete Latin discussion.

The Gospel’s liturgical placement permits a Eucharistic horizon, but it does not make every patristic bread interpretation Eucharistic. Bede and Augustine directly emphasize opened Scripture, apostolic distribution, the Spirit, and the Church. Ambrose will supply explicit Eucharistic doctrine at the altar; the movement from the desert feeding to Communion is an editorial synthesis enacted by this Mass.

The Road: Grace Does Not Send the Hungry Away (Grad., All., Gosp., Off.)

The Gospel names the danger: the people may faint on the way. The surrounding chants make that road audible. The Gradual asks the Lord to return and confesses him as refuge; the Alleluia hopes in his inclined ear; the Offertory asks him to perfect the worshipper’s steps in his paths. Baptismal resurrection does not remove pilgrimage, exhaustion, or dependence.

Patristic witness	Reading of “lest they faint on the way”	Contribution here
St. Gregory the Great, Moralia I.19, preserved in the Catena Aurea	The preached word must supply consolation, lest people hungry for truth sink under the toil of this life.	Bede’s opened scriptural bread becomes provision for endurance, not information detached from the road.
St. Ambrose, Exposition of Luke VI.73, preserved in the Catena Aurea	The good Lord requires diligence and gives strength; he distributes to all, while the hearer must extend a hand to receive.	Divine provision and real reception are not rivals. The pilgrim acts because compassion supplies what action needs.
Bede, In Marci Evangelium Expositio II.32	Those “from afar” can signify lives that have wandered far in sin and return through repentance; the food of life is distributed through the Church.	No distance becomes a reason for Christ to dismiss the returning person fasting.

The Offertory answers Paul’s “walk”

Perfice gressus meos in semitis tuis does not offer an already flawless journey. It places actual steps beneath divine action: perfect or steady them in your paths, incline your ear, and show mercy. The one buried with Christ still learns how resurrection life walks.

The Secret: Faithful Asking and Effective Fulfillment (Sec.)

The Secret is the hinge between the road's unfinished steps and Communion's jubilant sacrifice. It asks God to receive the people's oblations and to keep every vow and petition from emptiness. Its final clause requires a theological guardrail: effectual fulfillment cannot mean that intensity of belief guarantees every temporal outcome requested.

Latin hinge	Immediate petition	Question it raises
has oblationes populi tui benignus assume	God is asked mercifully to receive the oblations of his people.	The prayer's efficacy begins in divine reception, not in a human technique.
nullius sit irritum votum	May no one's vow be void, frustrated, or without effect.	How is a vowed good purified when the one who vows understands it imperfectly?
nullius vacua postulatio	May no one's petition be empty.	Is a denied temporal request necessarily empty, or can mercy answer more deeply than the requested form?
quod fideliter petimus, efficaciter consequamur	May what the Church faithfully asks be obtained with real effect.	What makes asking faithful, and what counts as its divinely intended effect?

St. Augustine — Letter 130 to Proba, 15–18, 21–29

Augustine is not commenting on this Secret. He supplies doctrinal control for its strongest verbs. Prayer exercises and enlarges the desire by which the worshipper can receive God's immense gift; words recall, test, and rekindle that desire. Faith, hope, charity, and the Lord's Prayer govern what is asked. Temporal goods may be sought in relation to the one blessed life with God, but the Christian often does not know whether a particular relief will help or harm. God may mercifully deny what Paul asked and may grant an impatient request as judgment. The certain final object is life with God; every lesser petition is effectual only within that order.

What fideliter cannot mean

Faithful asking is not confidence that God must ratify the petitioner's preferred scenario. It is prayer formed by faith, hope, charity, the Lord's Prayer, and submission to the good God's will actually gives. A temporal refusal may therefore be an efficacious answer, while the Holy Spirit enlarges and redirects desire toward the unfailing final good.

The Secret also looks backward and forward. It receives the people's oblations, the same people whom the Introit calls God's inheritance and whom Christ feeds as a multitude. It asks for effect, and the Postcommunion will use causal language again: may the gifts cleanse by their operation and fortify by their aid.

Communion: The Sacrifice of Jubilation (Comm., Postcomm.)

The Communion antiphon takes Psalm 26:6: "I have gone about, and have sacrificed in his tabernacle a sacrifice of jubilation; I will sing and give praise to the Lord." Augustine's Exposition on Psalm 26, 6 is direct interpretation of that appointed verse, although not of its later Communion placement.

St. Augustine — Exposition on Psalm 26, 6

Augustine reads the going-about as faith's world-embracing confession of Christ. The sacrifice of rejoicing praises God for the Son's humility in time and sounds in both heart and deed. This is a sacrifice of praise, not yet an explicit Eucharistic exposition. At Communion, the formulary itself places that praise upon sacramental reception.

Ambrose supplies explicit altar doctrine: the cleansed people hastens to Christ's Body and Blood, made by his consecrating word, and the communicant's "Amen" joins faith to confession. This font-to-altar mystagogy is doctrinally concrete without becoming commentary on Psalm 26 or Mark 8.

Exploratory Proposals

The proposals below are exploratory AI-generated syntheses of the appointed propers. They are attributed to none of the cited authorities and make no claim about the formulary's historical compositional intent; each proposal states its principal limit or alternative.

Can burial and nourishment belong to one paschal itinerary? (Coll., Ep., Gosp., Postcomm.) Romans begins Christian life with burial into Christ's death and a walk in newness; the Collect asks God to nourish and preserve what he has implanted; Christ feeds people who cannot sustain themselves on the road; and the Postcommunion asks received gifts to fortify them. Together these propers suggest that resurrection life is not self-maintaining possession but a life repeatedly sustained by gift. Mark's crowd and its hunger remain literal, however, and the Gospel is not claimed to have been composed as an allegory of baptism or the Eucharist.

Newness of life still knows how to say "return." (Ep., Grad., All.) The Epistle speaks decisively of death to sin and life to God, while the Gradual asks the Lord to return and the Alleluia urgently seeks deliverance. Their juxtaposition permits a paradox: baptismal confidence may deepen supplication because the newly alive know whose life they have received. The pleas do not cast doubt on baptism's reality, and their original psalmic dangers should not be reduced to an interior drama about sin.

The road joins bodily need to moral dependence. (Ep., Gosp., Off., Sec.) Paul commands a new walk; Jesus refuses to send hungry bodies away lest they faint; the Offertory asks that wavering steps be made firm; and the Secret asks that faithful petition reach effective fulfillment. The sequence can make bodily mercy a criterion of spiritual pilgrimage: grace steadies persons whose wills and bodies both remain needy. This is a liturgical convergence, not evidence of a hidden compositional chain, and effective prayer cannot be equated with control over a preferred temporal result.

Fullness leaves room for what comes next. (Gosp., Comm., Postcomm.) The crowd eats and is filled, yet baskets remain; Communion turns reception into a sacrifice of jubilation; the Postcommunion says Repleti sumus and immediately asks for cleansing and aid. Abundance may therefore be heard not as closure but as provision that exceeds the moment of consumption and equips continued praise and conversion. The baskets are first literal remnants, no fixed sacramental code is assigned to seven, and the prayer is not claimed to quote Mark.

Jubilation is the voice of dependence, not its opposite. (Int., Comm., Postcomm.) The Introit begins with a cry against divine silence and a confession that God is the people's strength. At Communion that dependent people offers jubilation, and after reception it still asks to be cleansed and fortified. Praise can thus be heard as dependence becoming articulate rather than need being left behind. This relation does not reduce sacramental efficacy to an emotion of gratitude or imply that felt joy is the measure of fruitful reception.

Notable Quotables

- Epistle, Rom. 6:9 — Adaptation; Dylan Thomas, “And death shall have no dominion” (1933; revised in Twenty-five Poems, 1936), title and refrain. Thomas turns Paul’s Christ-specific “death hath no more dominion over him” into a repeated universal claim amid bodily ruin, love, and imagined rising.
- Gradual, Ps. 89:1, 13 (modern 90:1, 13) — Exact quotation; Ralph Vaughan Williams, Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Refuge (1921), opening and after the “years of our age” passage. The motet sets both appointed clauses and layers Watts’s metrical Psalm 90 over the prose psalm; Westminster Abbey performed it at the Unknown Warrior centenary in 2020, joining generational refuge to national remembrance.

References

- Missale Romanum, editio typica (Vatican City: Typis Polyglottis Vaticanis, 1962), Dominica Sexta post Pentecosten, printed pp. 384–385, facsimile; all ten elements collated.
- Internet Archive, 1962 missal item and OCR finding aid; focused retrieval, checksums, witness differences, and complete transcription: propers/verified.md.
- Holy Scripture: Numbers 14; Psalms 16, 26, 27, 30, 89; Mark 7–8; Luke 23:46; Acts 7:59; Romans 6, 15–16. Psalm numbering follows the Vulgate.
- St. John Chrysostom, Homily 10 on Romans, on 6:2–4, working public-domain text; Homily 11 on Romans, on 6:5–14, working public-domain text.
- St. Cyril of Jerusalem, Mystagogical Catechesis II (Catechetical Lecture 20), 4–8, working public-domain text.
- St. Ambrose, On the Mysteries 19–21, 28, 41–55, 58–59, font, seal, altar, and Eucharistic effect.
- St. Bede, In Marci Evangelium Expositio II.32, PL 92:205B–208D, public-domain Latin text; selected English excerpts in St. Thomas Aquinas, Catena Aurea on Mark 8.
- St. Augustine, Sermon 45 (95 in the Benedictine series), 1–3, on Mark 8:5, working public-domain text.
- St. Gregory the Great, Moralia I.19, and St. Ambrose, Exposition of Luke VI.73, excerpts at Mark 8:3 in the Catena Aurea.
- St. Augustine, Letter 130 to Proba, 15–18, 21–29, desire, faithful prayer, and submission to God’s answer; Exposition on Psalm 26, 6, sacrifice of jubilation. New Advent’s psalm page heading uses Psalm 27.
- Dylan Thomas, “And death shall have no dominion,” first published in New English Weekly (1933), revised in Twenty-five Poems (1936); Dylan Thomas Centre, publication history and Romans 6:9 source.
- Ralph Vaughan Williams, Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Refuge (1921), motet for choir and organ; British Music Collection catalog; Westminster Abbey, Unknown Warrior centenary service, pp. 11–12.

Biblical-historical orientation

- NABRE: introductions to Psalms, Mark, and Romans; texts and notes for Psalms 17, 27, 28, 31, 90, and Mark 8; accessed 2026-07-10.
- Traditional orientation: New Advent Bible titles for Psalms 16, 26, 27, 30, and 89; Catholic Encyclopedia, “Psalms”, “Moses”, “Gospel of Mark”, and “Chronology of Jesus”; accessed 2026-07-10.

Search Scope and Limitations

Text. Ten propers collated with the 1962 typical-edition facsimile, printed pp. 384–385. History. Seven direct passages in canonical order; traditional attribution, narrated setting, audience, and modern judgment distinguished. Reception. Romans 6, Mark 8, Psalm 26, sacramental mystagogy, faithful prayer, and two cultural uses. Limits. Psalm origins, Mark’s date and city, the feeding’s exact site, and its civil year remain uncertain; the public survey is not exhaustive. Full records. propers/verified.md; research/scope.md.

Generation Metadata

Generated: 2026-07-10

Model: gpt-5.6-sol; effort=ultra

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agents (primary, research, and layout-review roles); Codex CLI 0.144.1; API workspace; unexposed: server revision

Reuse and Rights

To the extent the project holds the relevant rights, project-created editorial content, annotations, translations, and design are licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

This license does not cover Scripture; liturgical or official texts; received prayers or hymns; quotations; fonts; or other third-party material, which retain their own status. It creates no exclusive rights in public-domain material.

Changes must be identified. Attribution may identify Triptych as the source, but it does not imply Triptych or ecclesiastical approval. The complete license map and detailed exclusions are recorded in the `LICENSE` and `THIRD_PARTY.md` files distributed with the source.