

Sixteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Year A

PC-S40-A

Textual unit	Text / citation
Introductory Rites
Entrance Antiphon	Ps. 54:6, 8; sustaining help and praise
Collect	Propitiare... et clementer gratiae tuae... dona multiplica
Liturgy of the Word
First Reading	Wis. 12:13, 16–19
Responsorial Psalm	Response Ps. 86:5a; vv. 5–6, 9–10, 15–16
Second Reading	Rom. 8:26–27
Gospel Acclamation	Cf. Matt. 11:25
Gospel	Long: Matt. 13:24–43; Short: Matt. 13:24–30
Liturgy of the Eucharist
Prayer over Offerings	Deus, qui legalium differentiam hostiarum unius sacrificii perfectione sanxisti
Communion Antiphon	A: Ps. 111:4–5; memorial, mercy, and food; B: Rev. 3:20; knock and meal
Prayer after Communion	Populo tuo... quem mysteriis caelestibus imbuisti

Sense	Synthesis
Literal	Wisdom praises the strong yet clement Judge; Paul names the Spirit's aid in prayer; Jesus forbids premature uprooting and orders a delayed harvest, while the long form adds hidden growth and interprets the harvest.
Allegorical	In the long-form explanation, the Son of Man sows good seed and governs a kingdom whose mixture cannot defeat his victory. The Spirit prays within the saints; Christ gathers diverse gifts into one sacrifice.
Moral	Practice patient discernment; admit weakness in prayer; correct without presuming to know hearts; grow in hope, faith, and charity; seek repentance under God's clemency.
Anagogical	The long Gospel reveals the angelic harvest and the righteous shining in the Father's kingdom; the short form's delayed harvest still directs hearers toward judgment.

Scriptural Date and Location

Canonical order governs; composition and narrated-event rows remain distinct, and branches stay explicit. Matthew 13's internal Psalm citation remains within the long Gospel, not a separate Lectionary unit.

Textual unit / alternative	Citation	Location	Date
Entrance	Ps. 54:6, 8	Kingdom of Israel; exact composition place unknown	Davidic attribution traditional; date unknown
The Davidic heading names no event; author, place, and date remain unresolved. Fear, desired escape, civic violence, betrayal, petition, and trust frame the lament. The Entrance selects sustaining help, offering, and praise without erasing anguish.
Responsorial Psalm	Ps. 86:5–6, 9–10, 15–16	Israel; exact composition place unknown	Davidic attribution traditional; date unknown
Davidic title; no secure authorial event, place, or final date. Lament, trust, instruction, universal worship, and divine compassion turn Wisdom's lenient rule into the servant's appeal for attention, strength, and mercy.
Communion A	Ps. 111:4–5	Israel's wisdom and liturgical tradition; exact place unknown	Author and date unknown
Author, date, and place unknown. The alphabetic communal instruction praises works, righteousness, mercy, covenant, provision, and redemption. Communion branch A appoints memorial and food language without claiming original reference to this formulary.
First Reading	Wis. 12:13, 16–19	Alexandria, Egypt, commonly proposed	Late first century BC commonly proposed
The book uses Solomon's wisdom persona; modern Catholic study generally places its Greek author and Jewish audience at Alexandria. Unlimited mastery needs no defensive harshness: clemency teaches kindness and gives sinners hope of repentance. Verses 14–15 are outside the appointed boundary.
Acclamation / Gospel branches	Cf. Matt. 11:25; Matt. 13:24–43 / 13:24–30	Palestine in traditional attribution; Antioch plausible for the final Greek Gospel	Traditional early apostolic date; modern majority c. AD 80–90
Acclamation source event	Matt. 11:20–30	Galilee; exact place unrecorded	Public ministry, c. AD 28–29
Gospel narrated event	Matt. 13:24–43	Sea-of-Galilee teaching region, then a house; exact locations unrecorded	Galilean ministry, c. AD 28
Tradition names Matthew writing for Jewish believers in Palestine; the modern majority posits an unknown Greek author after AD 70, often at Antioch. The acclamation uses Jesus' earlier thanksgiving. The long branch gives three parables, fulfillment notice, and private explanation; the short gives only weeds through delayed harvest.
Second Reading	Rom. 8:26–27	Corinth, Achaia (present-day Greece)	c. AD 57
Paul writes from Corinth to mixed Jewish and Gentile house churches at Rome near his eastern mission's end. After creation and believers groan, the Spirit aids weak prayer beyond speech; the heart-searching God knows the Spirit's intention. This is semi-continuous, not Gospel-field imagery.
Communion B	Rev. 3:20	Patmos and the seven churches of Roman Asia	Late first century, often c. AD 95
John writes from Patmos to seven churches in western Asia Minor; exact compositional stages remain debated. The risen Christ rebukes Laodicean self-satisfaction, calls for zeal and repentance, and promises table fellowship. Communion branch B appoints the invitation without canceling the admonition.

The Propers: Themes and Movement

Governing account

The correlated strand joins Wisdom's lenient sovereign to the householder who refuses a destructive early purge: patience rests on mastery and remains ordered to judgment. Romans adds a distinct interior strand in which the Spirit helps weak prayer, while the Prayer over the Offerings, Communion alternatives, and final prayer gather diverse gifts into the one sacrifice and ask that heavenly mysteries carry the people into new life.

Four-stage movement at a glance

- 1. Sustained under grace — Entrance; Collect. God sustains the assembly and increases hope, faith, and charity.
- 2. Strong enough to be patient — First Reading; Psalm; Gospel. Wisdom, Psalm, and Gospel distinguish clemency from inability to judge; patience does not suspend safeguarding or moral truth.
- 3. Weakness becomes prayer — Second Reading; Acclamation. The Spirit aids inadequate prayer in a semi-continuous Pauline strand, while the acclamation blesses revelation received as gift.
- 4. One sacrifice, offered life — Prayer over Offerings; Communion; Prayer after Communion. The appointed prayers and antiphons order persons toward common salvation and newness.

1. Sustained servants ask for multiplied grace (Entrance; Collect)

The Entrance does not deny the lament from which it comes. It selects trust from within fear and betrayal: God sustains, and praise follows. The Collect makes that dependence habitual by asking for growth in the theological virtues and vigilant fidelity. Neither text invites moral self-confidence; both locate perseverance in mercy received and grace increased.

2. Patience belongs to the sovereign Judge (First Reading; Responsorial Psalm; Gospel)

Wisdom argues that God can judge leniently precisely because no rival threatens his rule. Psalm 86 responds by invoking goodness, forgiveness, and universal lordship. Matthew's householder similarly delays separation, not from ignorance of the enemy or indifference to weeds, but to preserve wheat until harvest. The correlation supports patient hope while the long branch's explanation preserves final judgment.

3. The Spirit meets prayer before adequacy (Second Reading; Acclamation)

Romans names a weakness more radical than poor technique: believers do not know how to pray as they ought. The Spirit does not abandon them or replace them with an external voice; he aids and intercedes within their groaning before the heart-searching God. The acclamation's praise of revelation to little ones gives a fitting posture of receptivity, but the two texts remain distinct Lectionary strands.

4. Patient governance moves toward communion and newness (Prayer over Offerings; Communion; Prayer after Communion)

The Prayer over the Offerings locates diverse gifts within the perfection of one sacrifice and asks their fruit for common salvation. Communion A joins memorial to divine food; Communion B joins repentance to promised fellowship. The final prayer asks that heavenly mysteries move the people from oldness into new life.

Theological and Spiritual Synthesis

Wisdom and the Gospel reveal patience as an expression of sovereign strength. God judges justly without anxious severity, and the householder protects the wheat by delaying final separation. The Son's kingdom can endure a mixed field because neither the enemy nor hiddenness defeats the harvest.

Romans places this patience within prayer. Human weakness is acknowledged, and the Spirit aids the saints before their petitions become adequate. The response is neither passive tolerance nor presumptuous judgment: believers grow in hope, faith, and charity, protect those in danger, correct what requires correction, and leave judgment of hearts to God. The celebration remains ordered toward decision and newness. The long Gospel names hidden growth, final separation, and the righteous shining; the short form still ends with a harvest in which wheat and weeds have distinct destinations. The Prayer over the Offerings gathers gifts into the one sacrifice, the Communion alternatives present memorial or repentant fellowship, and the final prayer asks for a Paschal passage into new life.

Dimension	Appointed anchors	Source-grounded synthesis	Limit
Divine rule and Providence	Wis. 12:13, 16–19; Ps. 86; Matt. 13	Unlimited divine mastery grounds just clemency, preserves wheat through patient judgment, and gives sinners hope of repentance.	The official correlation does not suspend justice, correction, protection, or the distinction between Creator and creature.
Pneumatological and prayerful	Rom. 8:26–27; acclamation	The Spirit aids finite believers before their prayer becomes adequate, while revelation is received as gift rather than mastered possession.	Romans is semi-continuous, not a field allegory; Spirit-aided prayer does not remove words, discernment, prudent means, or action.
Ecclesial and sacramental	Prayer over Offerings; Communion A/B; Prayer after Communion	Diverse gifts are gathered into the one sacrifice for common salvation, and Communion leads through memorial or repentant fellowship toward new life.	The orations serve A/B/C, Communion alternatives are unresolved, and sacramental approach does not guarantee conversion mechanically.
Moral and eschatological	Collect; long/short Gospel	Hope, faith, charity, patient discernment, and protection of the good remain ordered to harvest and judgment; the long form names final separation and the righteous shining.	The short form does not proclaim mustard, leaven, explanation, angels, fire, or the shining righteous, and the parable is not a safeguarding policy.

The Propers: Detailed Commentary

Trust selected from inside lament (Entrance; Collect)

Psalm 54's confession of sustaining help is not cheerful detachment from danger. The full psalm knows terror, violent city life, and betrayed friendship. Appointed at the Entrance, its trust is costly: God upholds the speaker who cannot secure the world. The accompanying resolve to offer and praise makes worship response rather than leverage.

Augustine's exposition follows the Vulgate/LXX Psalm 53 and locates the help "within," in the conscience formed toward God rather than in visible success. He then reads the promised voluntary sacrifice as praise offered because God is good, not as flattery exchanged for prosperity. This is a useful ancient control on the adapted Entrance: divine support is present before danger is resolved, and praise is not a technique for forcing the desired outcome.

The Collect asks God to look favorably upon servants and multiply gifts of grace. Hope, faith, and charity are not interchangeable moods; they are theological virtues whose object and source are God. Vigilance over the commands therefore follows gift. The prayer avoids both self-generated virtue and grace imagined as exemption from obedience.

Clemency from strength, not from denial (First Reading; Responsorial Psalm)

Wisdom 12 addresses a classic temptation: to imagine mercy and power as competitors. The text reverses that assumption. Because God's mastery is complete, he need not prove himself through anxious severity. His might is the source of justice, and his government can be lenient while remaining judgment. The result is pedagogical: the just learn kindness, and sinners receive grounds for hope in repentance.

Augustine quotes the core Wisdom 12:15–18 sequence in Eighty-three Questions 53.3 while asking how God's tranquil judgment works through ministering agents. His treatment is direct verse-level reception rather than a continuous commentary on Wisdom's literary unit: divine action lacks perturbation even when created ministers experience and execute judgment in time. In his expositions of Psalms 2 and 6 he returns to verse 18 to distinguish divine judgment from the passions that disfigure human anger.

Gregory the Great likewise quotes Wisdom 12:18 in Moralia in Job V.78. His moral reuse joins tranquil judgment to restraint of anger: the ruler who tempers severity with mildness returns toward the likeness of the Creator. Gregory does not dissolve judgment into indulgence, nor does he expound Wisdom's Alexandrian literary setting. Augustine and Gregory together witness to a Latin reception in which divine mastery is untroubled and therefore trains creaturely authority away from reactive domination.

Salvian's On the Governance of God II quotes Wisdom 12:15 and 18 while arguing that universal divine government gives human beings dignity and makes their moral answer consequential. Aquinas later uses verse 18 in his Exposition on the Lord's Prayer: rational creatures are governed not merely as things moved from outside but as children capable of knowing and loving the Father's will. These Latin receptions move in different genres—apologetic Providence and catechesis on prayer—yet both protect the appointed conclusion that divine patience is pedagogical. Hope of repentance is not mere delay; it addresses persons as responsible creatures who can be taught to act justly and kindly.

The sequence Augustine–Gregory–Salvian–Aquinas also exposes a limit. "Judge with clemency" cannot simply be copied from divine to human power without accounting for creaturely ignorance, office, law, and the duty to protect. The Fathers and Doctor offer analogies of unperturbed judgment and filial governance, not a warrant for officials to claim God's mastery of every heart and consequence.

The omitted verses matter. Lectionary 106 moves from the assertion that no higher tribunal audits God directly to the power–justice relation, leaving 12:14–15 outside proclamation. Commentary may know that wider argument but may not claim the assembly heard every step.

Psalm 86 transforms teaching into prayer. The servant appeals to a God who is good, forgiving, merciful, gracious, patient, and faithful, while confessing that all nations will worship him. Mercy is neither tribal favoritism nor indifference. The response asks the Judge described by Wisdom to act according to his revealed character.

Augustine's exposition of the Vulgate/LXX Psalm 85 opens with a Christological account of prayer: Christ prays for us as priest, prays in us as head of the Body, and is prayed to as God. Later, when the psalm asks for an undivided heart, Augustine diagnoses the mind that wanders even while the mouth prays. That reception gives the responsorial action moral depth. Repeating that God is good and forgiving is not merely reporting an attribute; it asks that distracted desire be gathered into the mercy it invokes.

Weak prayer genuinely aided (Second Reading)

Romans 8:26–27 continues a sequence of groaning: creation, believers, and now inexpressible prayer. Weakness does not mean that every desire is pure or that discernment is unnecessary. It means finite, suffering persons cannot fully know the fitting shape of petition within God's whole design.

The Spirit "comes to the aid" rather than rendering the person irrelevant. Prayer remains a human act made possible and ordered from within by divine agency. The Father who searches hearts knows the Spirit's intention; the verse depicts Trinitarian communion, not a contest in which the Spirit persuades an unwilling God.

Chrysostom's Homily 14 on Romans reads the "groanings" in relation to the Spirit-given prayer of the Church and refuses to make spiritual help an excuse for passivity. Augustine returns to the same verses in Letter 130 15 and 28–29. He calls the disciple's condition a learned ignorance: believers know the end they seek but do not know which temporal form will serve it, so prayer may be carried more by tears and groaning than by many words. In On the Soul and Its Origin IV.13 he uses Paul's unanswered request concerning the thorn as a concrete case: a sincere temporal petition can miss what is fitting, while the Spirit forms the saint's deeper intercession.

These witnesses converge without erasing a real exegetical difference. Chrysostom attends closely to charismatic, ecclesial prayer; Augustine stresses the transformed desire of the praying saint. Neither imagines the Spirit uttering information unknown to the Father. Both preserve human weakness, divine initiative, and the real act of prayer.

Aquinas's account of created causes within Providence, read with the Catechism's treatment of secondary causality, supplies a doctrinal boundary. Prayer can be a real secondary cause within Providence; the Spirit's intercession keeps petition ordered toward the true good even when a requested temporal form is withheld. This does not make words, liturgy, prudent means, or persevering request unnecessary. Silent anguish and articulated prayer can both be taken into the Spirit's aid.

The short and long Gospel paths (Acclamation; long Gospel; short Gospel)

The acclamation adapts Matthew 11:25 and welcomes the Kingdom discourse through receptive littleness. It does not say that mature learning is evil; it blesses revelation as gift rather than possession. Its narrative source is earlier than Matthew 13 and should not be relocated to the house where Jesus later explains the weeds.

Chrysostom's Homily 38 on Matthew directly treats this thanksgiving. "Wise and prudent" names self-sufficient resistance, not the disciplines of learning, while "little ones" receive because they do not pretend to stand above gift. The adapted acclamation therefore asks for teachability before a parable that will frustrate premature certainty; it cannot be weaponized against scholarship, careful safeguarding, or the Church's duty to discern.

The short Gospel tells a complete parable. Good seed is sown; an enemy introduces weeds; servants discover the mixture and propose removal; the master forbids it because wheat could be uprooted; both remain until harvest, when distinct destinations are assigned. Patience protects the good while preserving separation at the proper time.

Chrysostom's Homily 46 on Matthew distinguishes this parable from the preceding sower. Here the seed has taken root and a counter-sowing imitates it; evil works by mixture and counterfeit rather than creation. He reads the prohibition against uprooting as a ban on killing persons for error and notes the danger that wheat will fall with the weeds. His homily still permits checking falsehood and defending truth. It therefore supports patient hope and the guide's safeguarding control together, not an undifferentiated policy of institutional inaction.

The long form adds two different growth images. Mustard begins almost invisibly and becomes capacious; leaven works hidden within a large quantity of dough. Matthew then explains Jesus' parabolic speech with an internal Psalm citation and moves from crowd to house. Jesus identifies sower, field, seed, enemy, harvest, and harvesters, and culminates in the removal of evil and the righteous shining in the Father's kingdom.

The same Chrysostom homily reads the apostles in the mustard and leaven: few and outwardly weak, they are entrusted with a word capable of reaching the whole. That missionary reception belongs only to the long branch. It also keeps “hidden growth” from becoming an excuse for doing nothing; the leaven is hidden because it is working.

Origen’s surviving Greek Commentary on Matthew, Book X, begins its sustained treatment at the private explanation in 13:36. He notices the spatial movement from crowd to house and reads sleeping as failure to keep watch while hostile teaching is sown among good conceptions. Unlike a modern botanical decoding, his account is a spiritual-intellectual diagnosis of counterfeit doctrine. Its value is branch-specific: Origen cannot be cited as though a short-form congregation heard the house, enemy, devil, or interpretive key.

Chrysostom’s Homily 47 follows the explanation to judgment. The Son owns the field, sends the angels, removes causes of sin, and brings the righteous into the Father’s kingdom. Patience is thus bounded by eschatology: delayed separation is neither denial that evil is evil nor assurance that mixture is permanent.

Those additions materially change what is heard. A short-form homily may use canonical context but should not announce that the congregation just heard the devil, angels, fiery furnace, or shining righteous named; it did not. Conversely, the short form’s delayed harvest must not be used to suppress the long form’s final judgment within Christian doctrine.

Patience is not a safeguarding policy

The parable denies servants the Master’s infallible final separation; it does not forbid removing a dangerous person from access, reporting abuse, applying proportionate discipline, protecting victims, correcting doctrine, treating disease, or resisting injustice. Such actions are governed by other moral, canonical, civil, and pastoral norms. “Do not uproot the wheat” is itself a protection command, not permission to expose wheat to preventable harm.

Nor may “children of the evil one” become a label authorizing contempt. Jesus describes the eschatological meaning of the parable. Living persons remain objects of evangelization and possible repentance; Wisdom’s appointed conclusion explicitly gives sinners hope of turning back. God alone judges hearts without error.

One sacrifice and common salvation (Prayer over Offerings)

The Prayer over the Offerings makes a strong historical-theological claim in compressed Latin: the diversity of sacrifices under the Law is sanctioned in the perfection of one sacrifice. It then asks God to receive servants’ gifts and order them to the salvation of all. Individual offering is therefore neither private possession nor another sacrifice alongside Christ’s. It is gathered into the one sacramental action and directed toward common good.

Memorial food or a repentant opening (Communion A; Communion B; Prayer after Communion)

Psalms 111’s Communion alternative joins remembered wonders, mercy, and food. Its full acrostic praise also names covenant, redemption, justice, and reverence. Eucharistic memorial is more than mental recall, but the antiphon’s psalmic source rightly situates reception within grateful remembrance of God’s works.

Augustine’s exposition of the Vulgate/LXX Psalm 110 reads God’s memorial and food together. He receives the food given to those who fear God as bread from heaven and a pledge of the inheritance, while keeping reverence and covenant in view. His Eucharistic reading is branch-specific reception rather than the psalm’s original historical referent, but it helps explain why memorial at Communion cannot be reduced to recollection of absent events.

Alternative B takes Revelation 3:20 from the address to Laodicea. The familiar knock is not first a sentimental image of an isolated individual. The risen Christ rebukes a self-satisfied church, commands zeal and repentance, then promises shared table fellowship. At Communion this branch joins invitation to conversion; sacramental approach cannot be detached from hearing the one who knocks.

Victorinus of Pettau’s surviving Commentary on the Apocalypse treats the Laodicean rebuke but does not furnish a separate exposition of verse 20 in the received English text. It can corroborate the corporate setting and summons from lukewarmness to repentance, not a detailed Eucharistic interpretation of the knock. Recording that limit matters: liturgical appointment makes the verse apt for Communion, while the ancient witness keeps its admonitory context visible.

Ambrose supplies direct reception in Exposition of the Christian Faith IV.19–23. He hears Christ standing at the door of the soul and joins the image to the beloved’s knock in the Song and the Psalm’s gates lifted for the King of glory. Jerome, Letter 22 26, and Cassian, Institutes V.19–20, likewise use the verse to press prompt interior response rather than delayed conversion. These witnesses are not commentaries on a later Communion antiphon, but they close the exegetical gap: the knock was already received as Christ’s summons to open, enter fellowship, and overcome the habits that bar the door.

The two antiphons remain distinct textual paths: one proceeds through remembered wonders and provision, the other through rebuke, repentance, and promised fellowship. The Prayer after Communion asks that the people imbued with heavenly mysteries pass from oldness into new life. “New” does not mean contempt for creation or memory; it names Paschal transformation of persons and conduct.

The Propers: Notable and Quotable

The sage addressing God: Nova Vulgata, Wis. 12:16 (editio typica altera, 1986). (First Reading) “Fortitudo enim tua iustitiae initium est.” Divine strength begins justice rather than anxious severity. The line describes God’s mastery; it does not grant human rulers divine omniscience or unaccountable power.

St. Augustine, Eighty-three Questions 53.3, Latin text, Migne, PL 40 (1845). (First Reading) “Deus puniat et dignis digna supplicia retribuat, cum ipse tranquillissimus maneat.” Divine judgment remains unperturbed. Augustine’s account of ministering agents does not transfer God’s omniscience, tranquility, or mastery to human rulers.

St. Augustine, Letter 130, ch. 15, sec. 28, trans. J. G. Cunningham, NPNF1 1 (1887). (Second Reading) “There is therefore in us a certain learned ignorance, so to speak.” Spirit-aided prayer humbles confidence about temporal outcomes. Learned ignorance is neither anti-learning nor an excuse for inaction.

St. John Chrysostom, Homily 46 on Matthew, sec. 1, trans. George Prevost, rev. M. B. Riddle, NPNF1 10 (1888). (both Gospel forms) “of the very tares it is likely that many may change and become wheat” Delayed uprooting leaves room for conversion. Chrysostom distinguishes non-killing from checking error; the line cannot obstruct safeguarding, correction, or just discipline.

The Propers: Interpretive Possibilities

The following exploratory proposals were developed in an AI-assisted editorial process. They are attributed to none of the cited authorities and claim no historical compositional intent. Each states its anchors and limits.

Learned ignorance can restrain the hand without paralyzing it. (First Reading; Second Reading; Gospel) Wisdom’s ruler judges clemently toward repentance; Matthew’s servants see weeds but cannot uproot them safely; Romans joins ignorance in prayer to divine knowledge and intercession. Together they distinguish recognizing evil from controlling every heart or outcome. Separate reading misses prayer as action within that gap. Its fruit is judgment that protects, reports, corrects, and prays without claiming final knowledge. Augustine’s “learned ignorance” and official patient-hope preaching are near analogues. Romans is semi-continuous; uncertainty never excuses evidence, competent authority, safeguarding, or action against imminent harm.

Hiddenness is not a moral verdict. (long Gospel; Acclamation) Only the long Gospel juxtaposes nocturnal counterfeit seed, a minute seed becoming shelter, and hidden leaven transforming meal; the acclamation adds revelation to little ones. Hiddenness can conceal evil or mark the Kingdom, so scale, secrecy, and speed cannot identify moral source. Separate reading misses this opposed hidden corruption and fecundity. Its fruit is discernment by truth, fruit, relation to Christ, and accountable process rather than virality. Chrysostom’s sequence is a near analogue but lacks the diagnostic. Long-form only: good and evil remain distinguishable, and doctrine, morals, evidence, accountability, and safeguarding govern.

The one sacrifice interrupts the manufacture of scapegoats. (First Reading; Gospel; Prayer over Offerings) Wisdom's strength gives hope of repentance; the householder protects wheat from uprooting; the offering prayer gathers many sacrifices into one perfect sacrifice for all. Together they forbid purification that offers expendable persons to communal fear or unity. Separate reading misses Christ's sacrifice judging scapegoating as false liturgy. Its fruit is a test for polarization, self-protection, and punitive spectacle that retains accountability. The exact conjunction was not located in the checked corpus. Not every sanction is scapegoating: discipline, restricted access, restitution, civil justice, and final judgment remain.

The Communion alternatives carry different clocks into new life. (Communion A; Communion B; Prayer after Communion) Communion A, if appointed, remembers wonders and food; Communion B hears Christ's present knock amid the Laodicean rebuke and anticipates table fellowship; the final prayer seeks new life. Compared without conflation, memory makes past fidelity operative while interruption breaks complacency. Separate reading misses how each governs "new." Its fruit is examination of what must be remembered and what summons is resisted. No exact conjunction was located. The branches are mutually alternative and unresolved; memory is not nostalgia, interruption is not rejection of tradition, and neither selection may be inferred.

Divine power refuses a single tempo. (First Reading; Second Reading; long Gospel) Wisdom locates mastery in leniency; the long Gospel spans delayed harvest, hidden growth, and leaven; Romans places aid within weakness and groaning. Together, power restrains, waits, grows, permeates, and intercedes. Separate reading may call patience inactive, growth merely gradual, or groaning deficient; the conjunction rejects speed and spectacle as measures. Its fruit is leadership distinguishing urgency from panic and quiet efficacy from passivity. Tertullian and official weeds preaching are near analogues, not this pattern. Mustard and leaven are long-form only; delay may be vicious, and charity may require immediate protection.

Appendix: Liturgical Resolution

Liturgical Instance

Field	Resolved liturgical instance
Celebration	Sixteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time; Sunday rank; green.
Formula	PC-S40-A; canonical Year A target; dated U.S. occurrence 2026-07-19.
Books	U.S. Roman Missal, Third Edition (implemented 2011), Week XVI owner; U.S. Lectionary for Mass , Second Typical Edition, Volume I, no. 106.
Calendar scope	General Roman Calendar as implemented for the United States; national scope.
Cycle	Sunday Year A.
Textual branches	Long or short Gospel and two Communion Antiphons.

Branch Resolution

Branch ID	Authority and trigger	Status	Units affected	Resolution
long-gospel	Lectionary 106	Appointed alternative	Matt. 13:24–43, including growth parables and explanation	Documented, not selected short-gospel	Lectionary 106	Appointed alternative	Matt. 13:24–30; vv. 31–43 omitted from proclamation	Documented, not selected
communion- antiphon- psalm-111	Week XVI formulary	Appointed alternative	Communion Antiphon A	Documented, not selected
communion- antiphon- revelation-3	Week XVI formulary	Appointed alternative	Communion Antiphon B	Documented, not selected

Appendix: Scope and Qualifications

Formula. Lectionary 106's Psalm response, both Gospel forms, both Communion alternatives, and the Week XVI orations and antiphons were audited. Branch limit. The short form omits Matthew 13:31–43; the guide marks the growth parables, explanation, and final imagery as long-form material. Reception. The appointed units were checked across Greek and Latin patristic, early Apocalypse, and medieval corpora: Augustine and Chrysostom directly treat the Psalms, Romans, acclamation source, and Matthew; Origen directly treats the long-form explanation; Augustine and Gregory receive Wisdom's tranquil judgment; Ambrose, Jerome, and Cassian directly receive Revelation 3:20, while Victorinus preserves its Laodicean context. Pastoral limit. The parable does not suspend safeguarding, correction, or just discipline. Rights. Only citations, short incipits, and original summaries appear. Outstanding. 2008 page-image typography and layout, full U.S. altar-book English-oration collation, and independent theological review; this working guide is not publication-final. Audit trail. `instance/manifest.md`; `propers/verified.md`; `../shared/ordinary-time/weeks/16/propers/verified.md`; `research/scope.md`.

References

Liturgical and scriptural sources

- Missale Romanum, editio typica tertia (Vatican City, 2002), Week XVI, pp. 465–466; the shared audit records exact owner evidence and the official 2008 variation-list result (Ordinary Time changes only at pp. 457 and 471; none at pp. 464–466).
- United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, 2026 Liturgical Calendar and Lectionary 106 occurrence page, checked 2026-07-15.
- Bishops' official Antiphonary, pp. 74–75, corroborating the ICEL antiphon assignments; protected wording is not reproduced.
- Holy See, General Instruction of the Roman Missal, especially 46–90; approved General Introduction to the Lectionary, especially 65–69, 78–91, and 93–110.
- Holy Scripture: Psalms 54, 86, and 111; Wisdom 11–12; Matthew 11 and 13; Romans 8; Revelation 3. Historical orientation used the corresponding New American Bible, Revised Edition introductions, texts, and notes at Wisdom, Matthew, Romans, and Revelation.
- Holy See, Nova Vulgata Bibliorum Sacrorum Editio, editio typica altera (1986), Wisdom 12:16, official Latin wording checked 2026-07-18.

Reception and doctrinal illumination

- St. Augustine, Expositions on the Psalms 53.8–11, 85.1 and 7, and 110.4–5 (Vulgate/LXX numbering), direct reception of the Entrance, Responsorial, and Communion-A sources: Psalm 53, Psalm 85, and Psalm 110.
- St. Augustine, Eighty-three Questions 53.3, direct reception of Wisdom 12:15–18, PL 40 Latin text; and Expositions on Psalms 2.4 and 6.3, direct use of Wisdom 12:18, Psalm 2 and Psalm 6.
- St. Gregory the Great, Moralia in Job V.78, direct reuse of Wisdom 12:18 on tranquil judgment and restrained anger, working English text.
- St. Salvian, On the Governance of God II, direct Latin use of Wisdom 12:15, 18 in an argument about divine rule and human dignity, Latin text; St. Thomas Aquinas, Exposition on the Lord's Prayer, use of Wisdom 12:18 for rational and filial governance.
- St. John Chrysostom, Homily 14 on Romans, direct treatment of Romans 8:26–27, working English text; Homilies 38, 46, and 47 on Matthew, direct treatment of Matthew 11:25 and 13:24–43, Homily 38, Homily 46, and Homily 47.
- St. Augustine, Letter 130 15 and 28–29, and On the Soul and Its Origin IV.13, direct reception of Romans 8:26–27 and the discipline of petition, Letter 130 and Book IV.
- Origen, Commentary on Matthew X, direct treatment of Matthew 13:36–43 within the long-form branch, working English text.
- St. Ambrose, Exposition of the Christian Faith IV.19–23, direct reception of Revelation 3:20, working English text; St. Jerome, Letter 22 26, working English text; and St. John Cassian, Institutes V.19–20, working English text.
- St. Victorinus of Pettau, Commentary on the Apocalypse, treatment of the Laodicean rebuke surrounding Revelation 3:20, working English text; contextual reception, not direct exposition of verse 20.
- First Vatican Council, Dei Filius, ch. 1, DS 3001–3003, official Latin text, on universal Providence including free creaturely acts.
- Catechism of the Catholic Church 301–324, Providence, secondary causes, permission of evil, and hope; 541–550, the Kingdom and parables.
- St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 22, aa. 1–4, on Providence and secondary causes, working English text; Summa contra Gentiles III.95, on prayer within Providence.

Generation Metadata

Last revised (UTC): 2026-07-19T12:50:42Z

Model: GPT-5-based Codex agent; unexposed: exact model identifier and model qualifiers

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agent (notable-and-quotable primary-source verification, wording, rights, and locus audit, compact reader-facing insertion, and final layout correction); API workspace; unexposed: client version, interface, and server revision

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agents (structural audit, document-revision, and production roles); Codex CLI 0.144.5; API workspace; unexposed: server revision

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agent (reader-order relocation, dossier compaction, visual QA, and page-break repair roles); Codex CLI 0.144.5; API workspace; unexposed: server revision

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agent (passage-level reception research, commentary expansion, and source audit); Codex CLI 0.144.5; API workspace; unexposed: server revision

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agent (interpretive-discovery proposals, targeted conjunction searches, and bounded novelty-audit role); API workspace; unexposed: client version, interface, and server revision

Agent/runtime: OpenAI Codex agent (interpretive-proposal compression, provenance correction, and layout-verification role); API workspace; unexposed: client version, interface, and server revision

Reuse and rights. To the extent Triptych holds the rights, project-created content and design are licensed under CC BY 4.0. Scripture, liturgical or official texts, received prayers or hymns, quotations, fonts, and other third-party material retain their own status; public-domain material remains public domain. Identify changes. Attribution implies neither Triptych nor ecclesiastical approval. See `LICENSE` and `THIRD_PARTY.md` in the source.