PC-S36-A: U.S. Roman Missal, Third Edition; Lectionary no. 94

Edition, rights, and review status

This guide studies the U.S.-English 2011 Missal instance beside Lectionary 94 without reproducing complete protected readings or English orations. Citations, Latin incipits, and original summaries identify the texts. The official occurrence and complete reading path, Latin formulary identities, and antiphons are source-audited; complete publisher-specific U.S. altar-book collation of the English orations and independent theological review remain outstanding.

Liturgical Instance

Field	Resolved liturgical instance
Formula and occurrence	PC-S36-A; Twelfth Sunday in Ordinary Time; Sunday, 21 June 2026; green.
Books and territory	Roman Missal, Third Edition , English for the United States (implemented 2011), and U.S. Lectionary for Mass , Second Typical Edition, Volume I, no. 94.
Calendar and cycles	U.S. implementation of the General Roman Calendar; Sunday Year A; weekday cycle not applicable to this Mass. No proper-calendar overlay was supplied.
Sunday structure	Penitential Act unless the permitted Sunday sprinkling rite replaces it; Gloria and Creed required; Prayer of the Faithful under the ordinary norm and locally formulated; no sequence.
Canonical owner	Ordinary Time Week XII. Its shared audit owns the Missal formulary; this leaf owns the dated Year A composition.
Unresolved enactment	Sprinkling, music, Communion-antiphon branch, and the Preface/EP pairing are unknown. Rubric 5 supplies a Sunday OT Preface unless the selected authorized EP carries its own; EP IV, if selected, carries its invariable Preface.

Appointed Elements

Element / branch	Book / status	Text / citation	Function / evidenced relation
Entrance Antiphon	Missal / appointed alternative	Missal option: cf. Ps. 28:8–9	The Lord as strength, refuge, savior, and shepherd.
entrance-chant-selection	Approved source / locally selected	Enacted chant undocumented	The Missal antiphon or another authorized chant may supply the Entrance layer.
sunday-sprinkling	Missal / ritual substitution	May replace Penitential Act	Unresolved.
Collect	Missal / required	Sancti nominis tui. . . timorem pariter et amorem	God's name is revered in both holy fear and love; his governance sustains those grounded in that love.
First Reading	Lectionary / required	Jer. 20:10–13	Officially correlated: the persecuted prophet entrusts his cause to God and praises deliverance.
Responsorial Psalm	Lectionary / required	Ps. 69:8–10, 14, 17, 33–35; response 14c	The afflicted servant petitions for a favorable answer; the poor are summoned to praise.
Second Reading	Lectionary / required	Rom. 5:12–15	Semi-continuous strand: Adam's trespass and Christ's superabundant gift are unequal measures.
Gospel Acclamation	Lectionary / required	John 15:26b, 27a	Acclamatory promise of the Spirit's witness and the disciples' testimony.

Element / branch	Book / status	Text / citation	Function / evidenced relation
Gospel	Lectionary / required	Matt. 10:26-33	Threefold refusal of fear, providential care, and public acknowledgment of Christ; no shorter form.
offertory-chant-selection	Approved source / locally selected	No Missal Offertory antiphon	An authorized selection may accompany the procession; none is documented.
Prayer over Offerings	Missal / required	Suscipe . . . sacrificium placationis et laudis	The Church asks God to receive a sacrifice of reconciliation and praise and to purify those who offer.
compatible-preface-and-eucharistic-prayer	Missal / permitted	Sunday OT Preface unless the selected authorized non-IV Prayer carries its own; no proper insert	Authorized compatible Preface/Prayer path; exact pairing unresolved.
eucharistic-prayer-iv-with-preface	Missal / permitted	EP IV with its invariable Preface; no proper insert	Coupled and inseparable under GIRM 365(d); unresolved.
communion-antiphon-psalm-145	Missal / appointed alternative	Communion option: Ps. 145:15	All creatures look to God for food in due season.
communion-antiphon-john-10	Missal / appointed alternative	Communion option: John 10:11, 15	The Good Shepherd lays down his life for the sheep.
communion-chant-selection	Approved source / locally selected	Enacted chant undocumented	A printed antiphon or another authorized chant may supply the Communion layer.
Prayer after Communion	Missal / required	Sacri Corporis et Sanguinis pretiosi alimonia renovati	Christ's precious Body and Blood renew those nourished and order them to redemption.

Branch Resolution

Branch ID	Authority and trigger	Status	Units affected	Resolution

The Four Senses

Sense	Synthesis
Literal	Jeremiah hears hostile whispering yet entrusts his cause to God; Jesus commands disciples to bear witness without servile fear; Paul contrasts Adam's trespass with Christ's overflowing gift.
Allegorical	Christ is the faithful witness and Good Shepherd who gives his life; in him the Church receives the Spirit, confesses publicly, and is fed at one table.
Moral	Courage is truthful fidelity under providence, not emotional invulnerability or reckless exposure. Holy fear and love displace servile terror while preserving prudence and justice.
Anagogical	What is concealed will be disclosed; God remembers the whole person, raises hope beyond bodily death, and brings Christ's superabundant gift toward final redemption.

In Illo Tempore...

Canonical order governs. Composition and narrated events are distinguished; inherited attributions and modern historical judgments remain visibly separate.

Element / branch	Citation	Location	Date
Entrance	Ps. 28:8–9	Israel; exact composition place unknown	Traditional Davidic attribution; historical date uncertain
The inherited title names David. The psalm moves from divine majesty to the Lord as strength of his people and shepherd of his inheritance. The Entrance uses the pastoral conclusion; neither authorship site nor date can be recovered securely.
Responsorial Psalm	Ps. 69:8–10, 14, 17, 33–35	Israel; Jerusalem imagery, precise writing site unknown	Traditional Davidic attribution; historical date uncertain
The title places the lament in Davidic tradition. Reproach, zeal, petition, and praise of the poor coexist. The appointed verses omit much of the psalm's imprecatory and autobiographical texture; the wider lament remains relevant context but is not silently inserted into the proclamation.
Comm. A	Ps. 145:15	Israel's worship; exact place unknown	Davidic title; historical date uncertain
This acrostic praise psalm confesses God's kingship, compassion, justice, and provision for creatures. The Communion branch uses the image of eyes turned to God for food; it remains an unselected option.
First Reading	Jer. 20:10–13	Judah / Jerusalem; final book shaped through later transmission	Prophetic event late seventh or early sixth century BC
The book identifies Jeremiah's long ministry across Judah's final decades. Chapter 20 follows Pashhur's beating and confinement of the prophet. The appointed confidence is surrounded by complaint and later curse; preserving that context prevents courage from being reduced to uninterrupted emotional calm.
Gospel	Matt. 10:26–33	Canonical Gospel: traditional Palestine; modern Antioch proposal uncertain	Traditionally early apostolic period; modern majority c. AD 80–90
Narrated event	Matt. 4:23; 10:1–33	Galilee; exact speaking site unrecorded	Public ministry, c. AD 28–29
Ancient tradition identifies the Apostle Matthew writing for Jewish believers. The canonical Greek Gospel is commonly dated after AD 70. The narrated sayings stand inside the missionary discourse: persecution is already named before Jesus repeats the command not to fear.
Comm. B	John 10:11, 15	Canonical Gospel: traditional Ephesus; modern history debated	Late first century
Narrated event	John 9:1–10:21	Jerusalem ministry	c. AD 29
The Good Shepherd discourse contrasts Jesus' self-gift with abandonment by a hireling. The Missal branch identifies Communion with the shepherd who knows the sheep and lays down his life; its use in a particular Mass remains unresolved.
Acclamation	John 15:26b, 27a	Canonical Gospel: traditional Ephesus; modern history debated	Late first century
Narrated event	John 13:1; 15:18–27	Jerusalem, final supper	c. AD 29–30
The acclamation draws from Jesus' promise amid the world's hatred: the Spirit bears witness and the disciples also testify. Liturgically it welcomes the Gospel's demand for public acknowledgment.
Second Reading	Rom. 5:12–15	Corinth, Achaia (present-day Greece), to churches at Rome	c. AD 56–58
Paul writes to mixed Jewish and Gentile churches at Rome. The appointed boundary begins the Adam–Christ comparison and stops before its later elaboration. The gift is expressly “not like” the trespass: grace exceeds, rather than merely balances, sin's devastation.

The Propers: Themes and Movement

Governing account: witness under providence, grace beyond trespass

Jeremiah and Matthew form the Lectionary's official witness-under-persecution relation; Psalm 69 answers it in lament and praise, and John 15 acclaims the Spirit's testimony. Romans proceeds independently from Adam's trespass to Christ's greater gift. The Missal surrounds both strands with holy fear and love, reconciliation and praise, shepherding nourishment, and promised renewal.

Affliction named → fear reordered → witness confessed → life received

1. Affliction is spoken before courage (Jeremiah, Psalm)

Jeremiah's confidence comes from within hostility, not above it. Psalm 69 likewise preserves reproach, petition, zeal, and praise of the poor. Their liturgical relation refuses two reductions: suffering is neither proof of abandonment nor an emotion to suppress. Trust can ask for deliverance while naming danger truthfully.

2. Fear is reordered by knowledge and love (Collect, Gospel)

The Collect holds fear and love together around God's holy name. Matthew distinguishes fear of persecutors from reverence for the One who judges and preserves the whole person. Chrysostom reads sparrows and numbered hairs as assurance of exhaustive divine knowledge, while denying that every creaturely fall is positively caused by God.

3. Witness belongs to Spirit and disciple (Acclamation, Gospel, Romans)

John's acclamation gives priority to the Spirit's testimony and then names the disciples' witness. Jesus requires public acknowledgment without promising immunity. Romans independently declares a still deeper disproportion: humanity's solidarity in Adam is answered not by an equal counterweight but by Christ's abundant gift. Courage is therefore graced fidelity, not personality or bravado.

4. The Shepherd feeds toward redemption (Entrance, Prayer over Offerings, Communion, Prayer after Communion)

The Entrance and Communion option B supply shepherd language; option A names creaturely dependence for food. The offering prayer joins reconciliation and praise, while the concluding prayer names renewal by Christ's Body and Blood. These shared Week XII texts can frame fearless witness sacramentally, but their use across A/B/C prevents a claim that they were composed for Matthew 10.

Pastoral control

"Do not be afraid" never commands concealment of abuse, refusal of lawful protection, medical neglect, or reckless self-exposure. Providence includes creaturely causes and prudent action. Christian witness may be costly, but suffering is not sought as an end and perpetrators are not excused as instruments of God.

The Propers: Detailed Commentary

Strength, shepherding, and holy fear (Entrance, Collect, Sunday structure)

The Entrance adapts Psalm 28's closing confession: the majestic Lord is also strength, refuge, savior, and shepherd. The image protects courage from self-reliance. The people facing witness are an inheritance carried by another, not a heroic elite sustained by temperament.

The Collect's paired fear and love rejects both servile terror and sentimental familiarity. Reverence recognizes God's holiness and judgment; love cleaves to his name and trusts his governance. The ordinary Sunday Gloria and Creed locate courage within corporate praise and confession. The sprinkling rite may lawfully replace the Penitential Act, but it is a ritual-substitution branch, not a proper text and not resolved by the date.

Jeremiah's lament and Matthew's disclosure (First Reading, Psalm, Gospel)

Jeremiah hears denunciation from every side, even from those watching for his fall. Yet he submits his cause to the One who tests the just and sees inward truth. The reading ends in praise, but the surrounding chapter proceeds into curse and anguish. Scripture therefore permits the persecuted believer to confess trust without pretending that trauma produces simple emotional serenity.

Psalm 69 answers in the first person. Reproach touches the servant because of zeal for God's house; the petition seeks an answer in divine kindness; the poor are finally summoned to praise. Augustine's ecclesial and Christological reception hears the suffering Christ and his body in the psalm, but it does not erase the lament's Israelite voice or prove the later Lectionary pairing's history.

Matthew's repeated prohibition of fear is reasoned. What is concealed will be disclosed; disciples cannot finally secure truth through silence. Human persecutors possess limited power. God knows creatures down to sparrows and hairs, and Christ will acknowledge those who acknowledge him. These claims establish divine judgment and care, not present immunity.

Chrysostom's distinction is precise: nothing falls outside God's knowledge and providential ordering, yet the text does not require saying that God positively effects every sparrow's fall. Catholic doctrine likewise distinguishes divine first causality, creaturely causes, permission of evil, and God's ability to bring good without making evil good. That distinction is decisive whenever this Gospel is preached to vulnerable persons.

The Spirit's testimony and the disciple's speech (Acclamation)

John 15 places witness amid hatred and expulsion. The Spirit of truth testifies to Christ; disciples also testify because they have been with him. The acclamation therefore protects Matthew 10 from individualism. Public confession is ecclesial and pneumatological before it is a test of private nerve. The verse welcomes Christ's Gospel word; it is not another semi-continuous reading.

The gift is not like the trespass (Second Reading)

Romans 5:12–15 begins a dense comparison whose grammar continues beyond the appointed boundary. Paul traces sin and death through Adam and then interrupts any expectation of equal symmetry: Christ's gracious gift is not like the trespass. Chrysostom emphasizes this excess. One act's devastation becomes the occasion for displaying a gift whose abundance cannot be represented as a mere zero-sum cancellation.

This apostolic strand remains semi-continuous. It should not be forced into an allegory in which Adam equals persecutor or Christ equals Jeremiah. Its liturgical contribution is plural: the same assembly hearing the demand for witness also hears that salvation originates in a gift exceeding inherited ruin.

Reconciliation, praise, and nourishment (Offertory, Prayer over Offerings, Preface, Eucharistic Prayer, Communion)

At the preparation of gifts no ordinary Missal Offertory antiphon is appointed. The actual music remains a local selection. The Prayer over the Offerings identifies the sacrificial movement as reconciliation and praise while asking that those offering be purified. Worship is therefore not a bribe paid by the endangered, nor a reward for courage; it is God's reconciling gift received and returned in praise.

No proper Week XII Preface or Eucharistic Prayer insert determines the thanksgiving. The choices are open but not independent. Under Tempus per annum rubric 5, a Sunday-in-Ordinary-Time Preface is used unless the selected authorized Eucharistic Prayer carries its own Preface. GIRM 365(b) allows Eucharistic Prayer II with its own or another suitable Preface; 365(d) makes Eucharistic Prayer IV's Preface invariable and inseparable. An actual instance must resolve the exact compatible pairing; its openness is liturgical fact, not an editorial gap to fill by preference.

Communion option A places every creature before the giver of food. Option B names the Good Shepherd whose self-gift distinguishes him from the hireling who abandons the flock. The Prayer after Communion then asks renewal through the precious Body and Blood toward redemption. If option B is selected, shepherd imagery forms a strong textual arc; if it is not, the guide must not speak as though it was sung.

Week XII is not a seven-day Sunday (Weekday spillover)

The following ferias use weekday Cycle II. An eligible feria may draw on Week XII or another Ordinary Time formulary, but proximity does not appoint one automatically. The weekday retains its own readings, omits Sunday Gloria and Creed, and follows the applicable weekday Preface rule. A separate manifest must record any actual choice.

The Propers: Interpretive Possibilities

Editorial status

The following are original editorial or AI-generated possibilities. They are attributed to none of the cited authorities and claim no historical compositional intent. Each states its anchors and limits.

Witness as received speech. (Acclamation, Gospel) The Spirit's testimony in the acclamation and Christ's demand for acknowledgment may support formation in which courage begins by receiving truthful speech before speaking it. This does not eliminate preparation, prudence, or the distinct authority of ordained and lay witness.

Providence and safeguarding as allies. (Entrance, Gospel) God's knowledge of the sparrow and the Entrance's shepherd image may encourage communities to make vulnerable lives visible through reporting, protection, and material care. The analogy is pastoral, not compositional; it cannot reduce providence to policy or policy to faith.

A gift greater than inherited fear. (Romans, Gospel) Romans' unequal Adam–Christ comparison can illuminate how patterns of fear transmitted through families or institutions are real yet not ultimate. The limit is strict: Paul addresses sin and grace, not a modern clinical theory, and spiritual language never substitutes for trauma-informed care.
